Dick: We hardly know ye ...

You'd think the 25th anniversary of President Richard Nixon's resignation would be a day of celebration and pride for America's newspapers, which would likely gloat over how their profession led to the downfall of one of the most powerful presidents in history. After all, it was The Washington Post and other newspapers that dug up dirt on the 37th president's misdeeds over the course of two years, ending when he quit on Aug. 9, 1974.

But a spot check of major newspapers, including the Post, indicates few are basking in the glow of the Nixon downfall.

"We don't have anything special planned," says a spokeswoman for Post executive editor Leonard Downie.

One of the few papers to offer some notice of the 25-year mark was the New York Daily News, which ran a two-page spread Aug. 5 on the activities of 24 of the Watergate scandal's major players.

But Daily News senior managing editor Arthur Browne says he's not surprised. "So much has been done that it is now being parodied in a new movie," Browne says, referring to the film "Dick," which debuted this week. "It is difficult to bring a fresh, new angle to the story." — Joe Strupp

A campfire story for conspiracists

Does a 10-year-old summer camp story between two boys deserve Page One prominence in a major daily newspaper? If that paper is The Hartford Courant, it does.

The Courant, a Times Mirror Co.-owned Connecticut daily with 211,000 circulation, published a 50-inch, front-page article July 28 that offers the identity of the elusive Watergate informer Deep Throat. The piece, written by reporter Dave Daley, contends that the man who leaked secrets to Washington Post scribes Bob Woodward and Carl Bernstein was the No. 2 official in the FBI: W. Mark Felt.

Daley's source? Chase Culman-Beck, a 19-year-old who says he attended summer camp with Bernstein's son, Jacob, in 1988. According to Culman-Beck, somewhere between potato sack races and eating s'mores by the campfire, the younger Bernstein revealed the information.

While the Courant story was picked up by some online new services and a few TV outlets, it was largely ignored by other major newspapers, such as The Washington Post and The New York Times, which have paid close attention to the Deep Throat mystery. Daley and Courant editor Brian Toolan say the article was never meant to establish that Felt was, in fact, Deep Throat, but rather was printed as another tale in the legend of the mysterious Post informer. — Joe Strupp

Controversy in Dallas

Belo's plans to buy a minority stake in the Dallas Mavericks professional basketball franchise has sparked dissent in the ranks at The Dallas Morning News, Belo's flagship. Word of the controversy spread like wildfire after the alternative Dallas Observer published a copy of a leaked memo by three reporters complaining about their paper's coverage of the deal.

At a staff meeting Aug. 4, top editors tried to assuage concerns that the purchase would taint future reporting, saying the paper would continue to cover the team aggressively. The planned deal includes a minority non-voting interest in a controversial arena that will be the Mavericks' future home and which the Morning News has editorialized in favor of. The authors of the memo and Morning News editors couldn't be reached for comment by press time. — Lucia Moses

Classifieds work ... all too well

Classified ads can work too well — just ask Clayton Goward. He's the Minnesota man who's drowning in mail three weeks after he advertised in the Minneapolis Star Tribune for help in giving away his $375,000 estate.

Goward, 79, estimates he's received more than 22,000 letters, postcards, and packages in response to the ad, which resulted in worldwide news coverage. After being inundated by calls, he changed his number to an unlisted one.

The letters range from requests for money to suggestions of charities to warnings of con artists.

Clayton Goward

Goward says he placed the ad because he's divorced and has little contact with his three sons. He's hardly pleased with the publicity that followed his ad. "I sought only ideas and a solution for making my will, nothing more," he tells the Star Tribune. "Worldwide coverage resulted, and now I am swamped."

Roll over, Beethoven

Germany's print media on Aug. 1 took a sledgehammer to compound nouns, expelled foreign words, and curtailed commas in their pages. It's all part of the country's new official rules meant to simplify the notoriously clumsy language, the AP reports.

Journalists have been taking special courses and newsroom computers have been reprogrammed to accommodate the changes. The media decided to adopt the rules jointly.

But opponents of the changes, which already have been adopted by Austria and Switzerland, aren't giving up the fight to preserve the language of Goethe and Schiller. They hope that once people see the changes in their newspaper, support for their campaign will build.

A recent survey of 1,100 Germans found that 45% planned to ignore the reforms. The rest said they planned to adopt the rules immediately or eventually.

Civic Journalism is ...

About making ordinary concerns compelling.

A lawyer friend of mine recently told me why he doesn't read newspapers anymore. He said journalists always focus on conflict and seek out people who have extreme points of view. He thinks we leave out the people in the middle because "they're boring."

Experience tells me he's right. Journalists do shy away from people who aren't clear in their convictions, who don't deliver powerful quotes.

Yet most people find themselves somewhere in the middle on issues. Before making up their minds, they like to hear what thoughtful, diverse people have to say – people the newspaper can introduce them to.

For me, civic journalism is about enlarging the range of voices on stories, bringing to the surface the values behind peoples' opinions, helping citizens see possible common ground and giving information on how, if they choose, they can play a role in shaping solutions.

Our challenge is to do so in engaging, compelling ways. Like The Enquirer's "Dear Mr. President" package. When Clinton came to Cincinnati four days after Ken Starr released his report on the president's relationship with Monica Lewinsky, we invited readers to send us the questions they would ask Clinton if they had the chance. Surprisingly, many of the 1,500 readers who responded didn't mention sex. They talked about China, unemployment and the environment.

Then again, a lot of them talked about sex – and their thoughts on the presidency and what should happen next.

Boring? Ha!

Paper moves 'adult' ads from sports to classifieds

by David Noack

In a practice amounting to the newspaper equivalent of a brown paper wrapper, the Star Tribune has moved so-called "adult" advertisements, featuring sexually oriented nightclubs and videos, from the sports section to the classifieds section.

The June decision by the Minneapolis-based McClatchy Newspapers property was sparked by reader concerns that children and teen-agers could easily see the adult ads while checking the box scores from last night's games.

The move by the Star Tribune does not mark the first time a newspaper has tried to segregate or even ban adult ads. Some papers also restrict the kind of language that can be used in the ads.

Last December, the Los Angeles Times banned adult advertising from establishments whose main business is to provide an overtly sexual service or experience.

Thomas Mohr, senior vice president for marketing and sales at the Star Tribune, says he doesn't feel moving the ads to the classifieds section will lead to other ads getting the same treatment.

"We will accept adult advertising. If we had banned these ads, I think it would have been hard to differentiate between our handling of adult ads and ads in other controversial categories. By allowing these ads to run, albeit [in] classified, I think we have found a balanced solution to the issue," says Mohr.

He says in 1998 the paper received $250,000 in revenue from adult ads, but he expects that to fall off sharply. He's not sure how many complaints the paper has received over the years.

Shelby Gregorich, the paper's advertising coordinator, says that even though the ads are in the classifieds section, advertisers can run display classified ads "depending on how much they'd be interested in spending." Gregorich adds that, prior to moving the ads to the classifieds section, the paper regulated the content of the ads. She says the paper looked at putting the ads elsewhere but probably would have received complaints no matter where they were placed.

In a column explaining the new policy to readers, editor Tim McGuire says that, while he is uncomfortable with the adult ads, these kinds of businesses are legally protected.

Responding to reader concerns, newspapers around the nation adopt new "adult" ad policies.

"As a company, we find it difficult to defend our right to print controversial things about government or business or important political processes if then we turn around and sully those First Amendment rights with decisions to refuse advertising on legal but controversial grounds," McGuire writes in his column.

Don Root, vice president of advertising at the Providence (R.I.) Journal, says the paper decided to control the content of adult ads in 1997 because they were becoming increasingly more explicit.

"We continue to run them in the back of our sports sections but have put in some copy restrictions. For example, we don't allow any photos of the entertainers other than head shots [and] we don't let any of the ads refer to the human anatomy," says Root.

He says the paper won't run the names of entertainers that are sexual in nature or have double meanings. It also bans such phrases as "nude room" and "table dancing."

"The ads have been toned down considerably. The complaints [from readers] have virtually stopped, and we're down in advertising space," says Root.

He says the paper lost about 30% in revenue from adult advertisers once the content policy went into effect. He declined to say how much money it made previously.

Root says they also screen personal or dating ads, which at times include suggestive or explicit language.

Lynn Sroufe, advertising sales manager for Fort Wayne Newspapers in Indiana, the joint operating agency for The Journal Gazette and The News-Sentinel, says it adopted a content-restriction policy last year.

First Amendment lawyer Rex Heinke says the courts have backed newspapers' right to refuse or alter the content of ads.

Gene Grant, advertising director at The Sacramento (Calif.) Bee, says the paper does not accept massage parlor and 900 number ads.

"We censor the adult ads shamelessly, but still have numerous reader complaints. They currently run on the sports agate page, but we are researching solutions as well. ... Since they are unlicensed or unregulated, we do not accept 900-number or massage-parlor advertising," says Grant.

Dwight Brown, vice president of advertising at the Houston Chronicle, says the paper placed adult ads in the classifieds section three years ago. "The reason was simple: People who want to see the ads will find them," says Brown, who also is president of the Newspaper Association of America's Display Federation. ■

D.J. seeks $3.5M for its legal fees

A day after a judge threw out a $22.7-million libel verdict against Dow Jones & Co., The Wall Street Journal's parent company filed a motion Aug. 4 seeking reimbursement for the $3.5 million it says it spent fighting the lawsuit.

A federal judge in Houston ordered a new trial in the case, in which MMAR Group Inc., a now-defunct Houston securities firm, alleged that the Journal defamed the company in an Oct. 21, 1993, story that led to the firm's collapse.

The judge had said in April he planned to throw out the verdict but delayed doing so for procedural reasons. He said MMAR withheld key evidence in the case that would have supported Dow Jones' defense. Dow Jones says it wants MMAR to pay its expenses and asked the court to dismiss the case. — Lucia Moses

Florida papers faulted

Sheriff unloads on press over sex-crime registry policies

by David Noack

The brutal murder of a Florida woman by a registered sex offender might have been averted if local newspapers had published the sex offender's name and photo when he was released back into the community, argues a county sheriff.

Criticism of the newspapers, the Sarasota Herald-Tribune and the Sun Herald in Port Charlotte, began in late July after police arrested 30-year-old Wayne Scott Harbison, who has a history of sex offenses, and charged him with the March murder of 19-year-old Sonya Lee Santiago, a Punta Gorda resident. The Herald-Tribune publishes a zoned edition in Charlotte County.

Charlotte County Sheriff Richard Worch, at a press conference following Harbison's arrest, accused the news media of not making the public aware that people convicted of sex crimes are back on the street and living among them.

"I don't know that Miss Santiago would still be alive if his picture had been published. But if the papers ran these photos, people would see them and remember their faces," Worch is quoted as saying in the Herald-Tribune.

Top editors at the two daily newspapers quickly defended their policies of not publishing the names and photos of released sex offenders.

They stressed newspapers must be independent of law enforcement; questioned the accuracy of the sex-offender list; and refused to engage in a case of journalistic double jeopardy, which would lead to someone being punished twice for the same offense.

Herald-Tribune executive editor Janet Weaver says her paper grappled with the issue of whether or not to publish the names and photos of registered sex offenders.

"Our decision was made about a year ago when the state starting making the list available to local law enforcement, and they started sending the newspapers the list. … We felt that it was putting us in the position of kind of acting like an extension of law enforcement," says Weaver.

She says checking on the accuracy of the information would have pulled reporters from other work.

"We felt that unless we were willing to commit — put reporters on it to track these folks' movement[s] — all we would be giving people is a snapshot of where these people were at that particular moment in time," says Weaver.

Jim Gouvellis, executive editor of the Sun-Herald, says he believes that running the sex offender list borders on double jeopardy.

He says the sheriff and state law-enforcement officials are asking newspapers to engage in "Scarlet Letter" justice.

"We print tons of information that some would just as soon see remain private. The divorces, bankruptcies, DUI convictions, and child support delinquencies of everyday people. … But we don't compile lists of people who were convicted of crimes in the past because we think the world would be a safer place," says Gouvellis.

Some states, such as Florida, had sexual-predator laws on the books before the widespread adoption of so-called "Megan's Laws." The laws are named after 7-year-old Megan Kanka, who was killed in 1994 by a twice-convicted sex offender residing across the street from her Hamilton Township, N.J., home.

These laws generally create a classification system for people who commit sex crimes; a registration process, which requires offenders to tell local police when they've moved into a community; and a notification procedure, which leads authorities to inform residents that a registered sex offender has moved into their neighborhood.

In Florida, there are two sex crimes classifications: "sexual offender" (lesser offenses) and "sexual predator" (serious and repeated offenses).

Under Florida law, persons convicted of sex crimes must register with local law-enforcement officials when they move into a community. The law mandates that police agencies inform residents when a sexual predator, but not a sexual offender, moves into a neighborhood.

The U.S. Justice Department estimates there are some 250,000 people either wanted for sex offenses or who have a criminal record of such crimes. Forty-nine states already operate or are establishing their own registries, as mandated under a 1994 federal anti-crime law. The FBI also is establishing a central database of sexual offenders.

Liz Hirst, a spokeswoman for the Florida Department of Law Enforcement (FDLE), says the method of notifying residents is left up to local law enforcement.

She says she doesn't know how many newspapers use the information.

Tom O' Hara, managing editor of The Palm Beach Post, says his newspaper initially did run sex offender stories from the sheriff's department, but the practice was stopped after a wrong photograph was provided.

"You hate to be perceived as an arm of law enforcement. You don't like to be doing the bidding of the cops. … We go to great lengths to avoid that perception," says O'Hara.

Hirst contends that newspapers run corrections every day and admits there have been mistakes in the database.

"It's not a good thing when there's an error. It's our job then to verify that it's an error and move promptly to make that correction, as the press does every day in their stories," says Hirst.

Ex-carrier gets life for killing

A former newspaper carrier who shot and killed an executive at his old paper apologized to the victim's family before being sentenced to life in prison, the AP reports.

Nathan Hanna, 40, was convicted of killing Anthony Gillespie at The Evening News of Sault Ste. Marie, Mich., in July 1998. Hanna's lawyer said he was insane and believed Gillespie was the Antichrist.

Sunday edition planned in Wash.

The Skagit Valley Herald, a six-day, 20,605-circulation daily in Mount Vernon, Wash., plans to add a Sunday edition, starting Nov. 7.

The Redfield (S.D.) Press' publishers bought two senior-citizen-interest monthlies and merged them into one, called The Golden Times. John E. van der Linden of Spirit Lake, Iowa, brokered the sale.

'Be a better neighbor'

Virginian-Pilot editor emphasizes citizen reporting

by Garry Boulard

NEW ORLEANS — Just when newspapers and reporters are viewed as being dismally disconnected from the people they are supposed to be writing for, newspapers have an opportunity to enjoy a return to popular favor. That is, if they try to see the world around them the way their readers do.

"We may be missing an historic opportunity to think of our own interests by thinking of the public's interest," said Dennis Hartig, managing editor of The Virginian-Pilot in Norfolk, at the 82nd annual meeting of the Association for Education in Journalism and Mass Communications here this week.

Hartig contends most readers are not as interested in the political drama of "who is up and who is down" as many Washington, statehouse, and city hall reporters are. Instead, he says, most readers, while wanting to know the story behind any public figure's ascent or descent, also desire solutions to their community's vexing problems.

In an era when newspaper researchers are increasingly "slicing and dicing" readers into such demographic clusters as soccer moms, urban actives, and rack-and-rifles types, Hartig thinks newspapers would be better off to emphasize the one thing that everyone — readers, reporters, editors, and even publishers — have in common: their status as citizens of the republic.

"The word 'citizen' is all but banned from our vocabulary," Hartig adds. But citizens — engaged readers who want to see the country succeed — like many things in a newspaper: hard news, sports, cartoons, and women's sections, but they also like the idea of finding answers to the questions challenging the nation and community. The questions they ask in response to any given problem we may report are questions like, 'What can we do about it?'"

In response, Hartig thinks newspapers should ask, "What would it take for us to be more helpful to democracy?" and "What if we were better neighbors?"

The answers to such questions, he says, may result in the kind of stories that have made the front pages of The Virginian-Pilot emphasizing both problems and solutions. Hartig adds that such citizen-reporting may also prove to make good business sense for newspapers as well, mainly because marketing surveys for newspapers repeatedly indicate that people have a "need for some connection to their community."

Boulard, a free-lance writer, has written on the social, political, and economic life of Louisiana for many newspapers, including The New York Times, the Los Angeles Times, and the Chicago Tribune.

Return of the Star Chamber?

Hearings surrounding a contempt-of-court charge against a California newspaper will remain closed to the public and press, despite requests from two news organizations to open the proceedings.

Santa Cruz County Superior Court Judge Samuel Stevens issued the closed-door order July 30, and repeated it at an Aug. 4 hearing, in the case against the Santa Cruz County Sentinel and one of its reporters, Robin Musitelli. The Sentinel and the San Jose Mercury News each filed motions Aug. 3 to open the proceedings, but Stevens has yet to act on the requests or the contempt charge itself.

The next hearing is set for Aug. 16.

BRIEFS

Belo to buy 2 Calif. papers

Belo, publisher of The Press-Enterprise in Riverside, Calif., bought the assets of two of the Press-Enterprise's competitors in Riverside County, The Hemet News and The Moreno Valley Times. Belo quickly turned The Hemet News, a six-day, 11,660-circulation daily, into a six-day-a-week supplement of the Press-Enterprise. The Valley Times, a weekly with a paid circulation of 3,200, will continue publishing. The Press-Enterprise has a daily circulation of 166,418.

Of the 85 employees at the two papers, 41 were permanently hired by the Press-Enterprise, publisher Marcia McQuern says. Others lost their jobs or took other positions.

The papers were owned by a partnership of William Dean Singleton's Denver-based MediaNews Group Inc. and Donrey Media Group. Terms of the deal were not disclosed. Dallas-based Belo also publishes eight dailies, including The Dallas Morning News. — Lucia Moses

Rhode Island paper to be sold

In a deal between two longtime family-owned companies, the Record-Journal Publishing Co. in Meriden, Conn., agreed to buy the Utter Co., publisher of the 11,000-circulation Westerly (R.I.) Sun, the AP reports. The Record-Journal Publishing Co. publishes the Record-Journal, a 28,000-circulation daily.

Record-Journal general manager David T. Lucey will become publisher of the Sun, replacing Dan O'Neil, who will become executive vice president and general manager, reporting to Lucey.

Poster to benefit paper's charity

Virginia Beach, Va., artist Rick Romano has designed and donated a poster for The Virginian-Pilot of Norfolk to be included in the Discover Hampton Roads section, an annual project promoting areas of local interest. Copies of the poster will be sold for $20 each, with proceeds going to benefit a children's charity operated by the Virginian-Pilot.

Scripps loses legal battle over severance payment

Case stemmed from the company's 1992 sale of the Pittsburgh Press to Blade Communications

by Lucia Moses

E.W. Scripps Co. lost a lawsuit seeking $6.4 million from its former joint operating agreement (JOA) partner, Blade Communications Inc.

A July 30 jury verdict ended a 3-year-old court battle between the two Ohio-based media companies that arose from Blade's purchase of the Pittsburgh Press from Scripps.

A Scripps spokesman says the company is considering an appeal. He declined to make further comment.

Toledo-based Blade bought the Press in 1992 after a strike by press employees earlier in the year shut down the Press and its JOA partner, the Pittsburgh Post-Gazette. Blade folded the Press into the Post-Gazette and hired almost all of the Press' 1,000 unionized employees following the sale.

Scripps took Blade to court in fall 1996, demanding about half of the $12.5 million in severance that Scripps says it paid to settle claims by about 375 nonunion Press employees who weren't offered jobs by the Post-Gazette. (Of those, 245 were hired after the sale.)

Scripps claimed that Blade misled Scripps about the number of Press employees it intended to hire at the Post-Gazette. Because some employees weren't given firm job offers before the sale, Scripps claimed, it had to pay them under its severance plan, even though most were hired immediately following the sale. Scripps said it designed its severance plan based on the understanding that Blade would make job offers to a certain number of Press employees.

After the sale closed, the 350 employees who didn't receive severance sued Scripps for severance payments as well as unused vacation benefits. Six former Press employees filed a separate lawsuit. Scripps lost the latter suit and later settled both of the suits.

Blade, publisher of The Blade in Toledo, countered that the contract didn't require the Post-Gazette to hire the employees before the sale was complete.

"The truth is, they knew what they were doing all along," says Fritz Byers, Blade's attorney. He says Blade was pleased but not surprised at the trial's outcome.

A eight-person jury in Hamilton County Common Pleas Court in Cincinnati, where Scripps is based, rejected Scripps' claims, also voting to require the company to pay Blade's legal costs for the suit as well as an earlier related case, to be determined later by a judge. Blade estimates the costs at $1 million.

Race-based suit filed in Dallas

A lawsuit charges The Dallas Morning News and its parent, Belo, of racial discrimination. The suit filed in U.S. District Court in Dallas in June alleges that black employees at the flagship newspaper are denied the same employment opportunities as whites.

The suit was brought by three black women, who claim they — like other black employees in the inside-sales section of the Morning News' classified advertising department — were disproportionately penalized for absences, underpaid, and passed over for advancements while less qualified whites were promoted. The suit seeks to represent all current and former black employees.

Belo has denied the allegations.

Filing the lawsuit were Rhonda Holyfield, a receptionist who was fired in 1997; Yvette Clewis, a data-entry clerk who resigned in 1998; and Kathy Wyatt, currently a copy-control clerk at the Morning News.

They had filed a complaint with the Equal Employment Opportunity Commission, which ruled that there wasn't enough information to determine whether discrimination occurred, says Doris Piper, the plaintiffs' lawyer.

'Fireball' ignites paper

Wyoming entrepreneur, a classically trained musician, finds the song of the printing press music to his ears

by Lucia Moses

No one can say Dale Bohren is boring. He ran a house-painting business before he invested in a diaper service. A classically trained musician, he also managed a local symphony, and, in his off hours, played the string bass in a blues band.

Dale Bohren

Now, he's playing a different tune. Meet Dale Bohren, community newspaper publisher.

The 43-year-old entrepreneur became publisher of the weekly Casper (Wyo.) Journal a year ago when he bought its parent, Wyoming Financial Publications.

While he may have some doubters among veteran newsies, Bohren says running a newspaper takes the same skills required at his other jobs: sales ability, people skills, quality, and customer service. He likes to say, half in jest, that everything he knows about business he learned by painting houses.

"There's really three common threads: the product, customers, and customer service," he says. "If you want people to buy the product, you have to show them what the benefit is."

Bohren lets the numbers speak for themselves. When he bought the Journal, it was a gray, six- to eight-page broadsheet with a paid circulation of 940. Today, it sells 2,500 in home delivery, plus about 600 on the street, even with subscription and cover price increases.

Bohren's overhaul touched all departments.

To give the Journal a new look, Bohren shrunk the paper to a tabloid and added splashes of color. He increased the staff to 12 from three. He raised ad rates but started offering discounts based on ad frequency instead of size to encourage small businesses to advertise.

Casper Journal

fifty cents

Casper hits record growth in service jobs

Media expansions ahead for Casper

The Casper (Wyo.) Journal is brighter and newsier after a facelift.

And he marketed the paper, on TV and radio. To get readers to look at every page, he ran random coupons for prize giveaways.

Bohren figured he could do a better job at covering local news than his competition, the statewide Star-Tribune, a Casper-based daily with circulation of 31,000. In the additional pages, he stuffed news about town elections and schools, as well as features about people.

"That's a niche that was wide open," Bohren says.

The work hasn't gone unnoticed. Competing in a class with 21 other Wyoming weeklies with circulation of 2,500 or less, the Journal won the Wyoming Press Association's top award in 1998 for a series of editorials. It also won first prizes in the news story and government reporting categories, and second prizes in the features, sports columns, and photos categories.

Jim Angell, executive director of the press association, says the Journal's success is clearly due, in large part, to its beefed-up news team. The new publisher, with his varied business experience, also blew fresh air into the paper, he says.

"Dale, of course, just comes in with so many new ideas," Angell says. "Because of his background, he's just a little different than what us old newspaper people might have thought of. He's a fireball. His enthusiasm is endless."

At this point, the paper remains propped up by the parent company's commercial printing enterprise — in the fiscal year ended March 31, it lost $22,500. But for March, ad sales were $14,600, up from $505 for May 1998, and the company turned a profit in the first quarter of 1999. At this rate, a confident Bohren figures he can make the paper continually profitable in three years. "It's going better than I anticipated," Bohren says.

Bohren, who looks at each of his jobs as a project, says his new role doesn't represent a change in direction. But he finds rewards in publishing a local newspaper — a sense of community, the power to change minds — that he didn't know before, a realization that struck him when he wrote a Father's Day column. "I had people really respond to it," he says.

Bohren, who's used to being asked about his next move, says he intends to stay put for a while.

"I don't anticipate doing something else in a few years," he says. "I really like running this business. Like the orchestra, you feel like you're contributing.

"[In terms of] community value, it's really one of the most rewarding things I've ever done." ■

A big Brit buy

Trinity is paying $1.98 billion for Mirror Group, publisher of the tabloid Daily Mirror, in a deal that will create Britain's largest regional newspaper company, the AP reports. The company, to be called Trinity Mirror, will own 155 newspapers with daily circulation of 2.3 million and weekly circulation of more than 15.3 million.

Trinity chairman Peter Birch says the new company will provide a platform for future expansion. Trinity's papers include the Western Mail, Liverpool Echo, and Daily Post. Mirror Group owns Scotland's Daily Record and Sunday Mail, in addition to the Daily Mirror.

Phoenix hotelier sues over Republic reportage

'There ain't no better defense than truth,' says newspaper attorney James Henderson

by Joe Strupp

A Phoenix hotel owner is suing The Arizona Republic, claiming the newspaper defamed him when it reported last month that his hotel was losing money, needed millions of dollars in repairs, and had been put up for sale.

Steve Cohn, managing director of the Phoenix Hotel Associates — owner of the Crowne Plaza Hotel in downtown Phoenix — filed the lawsuit in Arizona Superior Court July 23 against Phoenix Newspapers Inc., owner of the Republic, reporter Peter Corbett, and several sources who were cited in a July 21 article about the hotel. The suit seeks unspecified damages, legal fees, and court costs.

Cohn says the story hurt his business by giving the impression that his hotel is in dire financial straits, something he contends can drive away business and hurt the hotel's future economic viability.

The Republic's attorney, James Henderson, says the article gives evidence of the hotel's alleged financial problems and is backed up with proper sourcing.

"It's basically true, and there ain't no better defense than truth," Henderson says. "I don't know why they would file this complaint. It doesn't make sense."

The lawsuit cites several passages in the story saying the hotel is "financially troubled," "listed for sale," and "needs $25 million to $30 million in renovations." The story also quotes Cohn denying each allegation.

Cohn says the newspaper based its assertion that the hotel is listed for sale on an industry ad promoting the sale of a downtown Phoenix hotel that does not include the name of the hotel. "They made statements that were untrue," he says.

Underlying the lawsuit is a separate conflict between the newspaper and Cohn over the proposed construction of two new hotels in the Phoenix area.

The Republic has publicly supported the construction of new Marriott and Embassy Suites hotels in the city, arguing that growing convention business has sparked the need for more hotel space. Cohn has opposed the potential competition to his business.

Cohn says the Republic's coverage of him has been tainted by the newspaper's effort to support the new hotels, which are to be built within blocks of the Crowne Plaza.

"The newspaper has been taking shots at me all along because I have done things to block these hotels," says Cohn, who filed an earlier lawsuit against the city of Phoenix seeking to stop public funding for the new hotels.

Henderson refutes Cohn's allegations of biased coverage. "I don't think he likes the poor publicity he has received for his opposition to other hotels being built," he says. "I don't think the newspaper was trying to discredit him." ■

Competition for Hispanic paper

A Spanish-English bilingual newspaper launched by the former editor of an existing Hispanic-interest newspaper debuted in the Denver area last week.

HOLA Colorado brings new competition to the existing La Voz, according to the Denver Rocky Mountain News. HOLA editor Rachel Carrasco-Mendoza, who tried to buy La Voz in 1997, says she wanted to give Hispanic readers an alternative.

La Voz publisher Ivan Rosenberg offered only good wishes to Carrasco-Mendoza, sending her "all the good luck possible." — Joe Strupp

St. Cloud plans morning delivery

Citing readers' growing desire for a morning paper, the St. Cloud (Minn.) Times plans to switch to a.m. delivery, as early as fall. The 28,500-circulation daily now comes out in the afternoon on weekdays and in the morning on weekends.

A paper-peddling plan

SoCalGas hopes printer's ink will reap rewards

by David Noack

Drilling a new well in search of greater cash flow, a major natural gas company in Southern California has applied to state regulators for approval to sell newspaper subscriptions.

The Southern California Gas Co. wants the California Public Utilities Commission (PUC) to OK the new business plan, which would have company representatives asking customers either seeking new service or transferring gas service if they would like to hear pitches about getting newspapers.

SoCalGas had hoped to launch a trial program with the Los Angeles Times, which has been involved since October 1998 in a pilot subscription program with Southern California Edison (SCE), a major electric company. The gas company's plans were sidelined by The Utility Reform Network (TURN), a San Francisco-based consumer group and the PUC's Office of Ratepayer Advocates, which questioned whether the new venture would detract from the utility's main business.

SoCalGas is a subsidiary of Sempra Energy; SCE is a subsidiary of Edison International.

PUC spokesman Scott Logan says SCE did not need regulatory approval because it was already involved in selling newspaper subscriptions before new rule changes went into effect.

"The deal was that, whatever services were in place prior to December 1997, they needed to do a filing to identify them, but basically they were automatically approved. They were grandfathered-in," says Logan, who adds the review process will take about two months.

SoCalGas describes the new service as a convenience for customers, who would not have to make additional telephone calls to start home delivery of newspapers. Under the plan, the company only would provide the name of a potential customer to the newspaper, which then would take care of delivery, customer service, and billing.

For a newspaper to be considered for the SoCalGas program, it would need a base circulation of at least 100,000 and must already provide home delivery.

However, utility company officials say the circulation figure is flexible. They would consider a paper with less circulation, and a final decision would be based on a business plan the paper submits to the utility.

The Press-Enterprise in Riverside, with its circulation of 166,000, would meet the requirements, as would the Daily News in Los Angeles, The Orange County Register in Santa Ana, and the Press-Telegram in Long Beach.

But at least one publisher of a newspaper with less than 100,000 circulation has expressed concerns about the proposed plan.

Mark Adkins, publisher of The Sun in San Bernardino, opposes the circulation requirement.

"It's an issue [because] if someone went in and negotiated a exclusive arrangement, that's one thing. It's another that they pick an arbitrary benchmark and exclude one newspaper," says Adkins.

SoCalGas spokeswoman Denise King says revenues generated by this venture would be returned to the company's ratepayers. The utility and each newspaper would negotiate a fee for any new subscribers. No figures were disclosed.

Southern California Gas Company
Glad to be of service

"We see it benefiting the company and the ratepayers as well," says King. She adds that the utility would be paid a flat fee for each new customer who accepts the newspaper and remains a subscriber for a specified length of time and that it's "too soon to comment on how much we expect to make off this new service."

SoCalGas market development director Patti Wagner says the 100,000-circulation figure is not set in stone. She says that if a newspaper with a circulation under 100,000 came to the utility with a business plan for selling subscriptions, the proposal would be considered.

"Our first step is to get commission approval. We are going to do what makes business sense for us, and we have an obligation to our ratepayers to do that," says Wagner, who adds SoCalGas would look at all proposals on a case-by-case basis and emphasizes that while the gas company would look at any newspaper subscription business plan, partnerships with the larger newspapers make the most economic sense.

A Los Angeles Times spokesman says the paper got involved in the pilot project with the electric utility to better market the newspaper.

"The pilot program is targeted at 'new movers.' Subscriptions are offered via SCE's inbound call center only to SCE customers who are starting power service at a new address. Since this is a pilot program, only a small percentage of SCE new-connect customers receive the solicitation," says the spokesman.

Marcia McQuern, editor and publisher of The Press-Enterprise, calls the SoCalGas proposal "intriguing" but says she wants to learn more details. She's concerned about a competitor having an unfair advantage in her newspaper's back yard.

"They are deciding which ones they are going to sell. If it's me, it's wonderful; if it's my competitor, it's not. It's just intriguing, with a lot of issues to be worked out," says McQuern.

Jeff Brinley, vice president of operations and circulation of the Telegram-Tribune in San Luis Obispo, backs the proposal.

"I support the Southern California Gas Co.'s plan to sell newspaper subscriptions. I think it is a wonderful idea and look forward to approaching Pacific Gas & Electric with this as a model. The rule of 100,000 circulation and above is a concern, but one that I think the marketplace might settle in the future," says Brinley.

"I suggest that smaller papers like my own combine our efforts to approach the utilities as a 100,000-circulation group. We would need to resolve our arguments about borders ahead of time and present it with a unified, written, simple plan," says Brinley, who also serves as president of the California Western Circulation Managers Association.

In the Land of Lincoln, public records in chains

In Bond County, Ill., Sheriff Jeffrey Brown has an interesting reaction when someone asks to see a list of prisoners in his jail. He wants to know who's asking and why — so he can run a criminal background check.

"When somebody tells me they don't have to tell me what they need it for, that right there makes me think that you're trying to be difficult," Brown says.

It's pretty much the same case a few miles away in Macoupin County. Jailers there say they want to protect the privacy of prisoners, and the local state's attorney, astonishingly, backs them up in a phone call. Privacy is apparently a one-way street in Macoupin County: The jailers demand to know the name, address, and date of birth of the person asking for the list of prisoners.

So it went all over Illinois, when The Associated Press and 14 daily newspapers sent reporters, who did not immediately identify themselves or their mission, to each of the state's 102 counties to ask for public documents from the county clerk, the county jail, the city clerk of the largest city, and the superintendent of the largest school district.

"The visits ranged from pleasant to confusing to downright scary," reports AP writer Christopher Wells. "But most often, they proved frustrating."

In fact, nearly two-thirds of the time the reporters walked out of those offices empty-handed, with at best a promise that compliance would come later. That time never came for about a quarter of the 605 visits. County jailers were the most recalcitrant: 33 times out of 95, they refused to provide documents the Illinois Freedom of Information Act says any citizen can have.

Illinois now joins Indiana, Virginia, Connecticut, Rhode Island, and North Carolina on the list of states that have been subjected to freedom-of-information audits — and failed. Unfortunately, the only real difference between these six states and the other 44 is the fact that the former have been audited and the latter have not: The results are likely to be similar across the nation.

So why bother with audits at all? First, because newspapers owe it to themselves and their communities to ensure that public records remain public for everybody — not just journalists. And second, because audits do spur changes.

In an interview as the final installment of the "Your Records, Their Rules" project was published, Illinois Gov. George H. Ryan, nobody's nominee for Government-in-Sunshine Man of the Year, said, "I will promise you fast action, quick action on this, and I am willing to consider anything that is reasonable."

Just a politician's words, perhaps, but in neighboring Indiana, Gov. Frank O'Bannon reacted to that state's audit by appointing the nation's only "public access counselor" and issuing an executive order demanding agencies comply with open-records laws.

The Illinois county mandarins who think public records are none of the public's business are shamed by this audit. But the greater shame would be if nothing were done to improve the access to information in the Land of Lincoln.

Winning the war for suburbia

I was pleased to see E&P devote attention in the June 26 cover story ("Suburban Warfare") to the suburban battlegrounds for readers and advertisers. Although the article focused primarily on the aggressive turf wars taking place in the Arlington/Dallas/Fort Worth region, similar fights for readers, advertisers, and subscribers are taking place in many of the affluent suburban areas throughout North America.

According to a recent Simmons Market Research Bureau study commissioned by Suburban Newspapers of America, the average annual household income in suburbia exceeds $76,000, the median home value is $141,000, and 39% are college-educated. This demographic data — as well as all other data that are typically relied upon by advertisers to make effective marketing decisions — were measured by Simmons and reveal that suburban areas are far above U.S. national averages.

So it's obvious that what is at stake in Arlington is indicative of what's being fought for by thousands of other local suburban newspapers throughout the United States and Canada.

The suburban turf war will be won only by the newspaper company that:

- Doesn't skimp on its allocations of sufficient amounts of people to provide the community with an impressive depth and scope of local news coverage.
- Participates in and promotes lots of community events.
- Doesn't underestimate the sophisticated needs and desires of its local readers and advertisers.

Although it vindicates the British press on charges of monopoly, the recently published report of the Royal Commission on the Press finds that Britain's newspapers "fail to supply the electorate with adequate materials for sound political judgement." The 363-page report is the result of a two-year study by the commission.

Following the rash of editorials on careless driving, the Shreveport (La.) Times went one further, sponsoring a traffic safety campaign called "Operation Safety," which awards prizes to responsible drivers.

Shaping up Shapiro's tactics

You know, singer Billy Idol once said you can be a rock star by simply calling yourself one, and the same can be said for Jeff Shapiro. He has become an "investigative journalist" simply because he calls himself one, but you won't find many people who would use that description of Shapiro, as noted in your story ["The Tabloid Turncoat," July 24, p. 18].

So one cannot help but laugh to see Shapiro get even more miles for his so-called "undercover" work (as he once described it to me) as a tabloid reporter. Regardless, no amount of revisionist history can negate the fact that Shapiro accepted the position knowing full well what was expected of him and in fact went out of his way to exceed even those wide boundaries.

Your stories and others have recounted some of these antics: dating a girl to get to her mother, who was a friend of Patsy Ramsey; hiding in trees; misleading a priest about his religious intentions, again to infiltrate the Ramsey camp.

You can add to this — stalking fellow journalists to the point that police were called, aiding and abetting in the theft of a story that this so-called "investigative journalist" neither had the talent nor the brains to do on his own, and so on.

I had my own run-in with Shapiro long after being asked to look into the Ramsey case for a possible story.

Months after I concluded my work, I got numerous calls from people in Colorado and elsewhere saying that Shapiro was going around like a rabid animal asking impertinent questions about my family and work, and their expressed warning was to be on guard, this guy was dangerous.

As a courtesy, I returned a telephone message that was left for me from him. He tried to con me like he does everyone else, and I wasn't having any of it. I did warn him that if he taped our phone conversations, I would see that he was prosecuted for it because he did not have my permission and the state in which I reside requires two-party consent.

Two months later, I received more calls from friends and colleagues who advised me that Shapiro was at it again. This resulted in our confrontation — not "confrontations" as you described in your adjunct pieces on your Web site: We had a sum total of two conversations. I warned Shapiro to knock it off, and he eventually proceeded to ask why I didn't like him and accused me of exposing his "undercover" work and whined that he was going to be fired because I discovered that he was, surprise, surprise, lying to his employers.

Two weeks later, he was indeed fired. As to his claim of "undercover" work, he never identified who he was doing this work for, but the clear insinuation was that he was doing it for some law-enforcement agency, which is all you need to know about Shapiro. Lying and deception are as reflexive for him as an eyeblink.

I will conclude by noting that the people that Shapiro railed against in his short but illustrious career, such as Peter Boyles and Anne Louise Bardach of Vanity Fair (whom he shamelessly called "psychotic" in his infamous tapes) are the real journalists. They go out and bust their humps and let their work speak for itself, and it speaks volumes. Shapiro's work has also spoken for itself — lying, deception, manipulation — at 25 he has a lot to be proud of.

But we need not worry about Jeff Shapiro. I hear he has found another ambulance to chase, and it is no less than the Columbine tragedy. Sources have told me that Shapiro has attempted to feed off this sad event by posing as a student. The story continues.

Corrections

The June 5 (p. 24) story and the accompanying chart on online news units incorrectly listed the expected 1999 revenues for newspaper new-media companies as earnings. To clarify, Times Co. Digital expects revenues of $24 million to $26 million this year. Tribune Interactive expects revenues of $25 million to $30 million.

Due to an oversight by E&P, GCN Publishing of Port Washington, N.Y., was inadvertently excluded from two recent cover stories. "Welcomed Visitors" (July 3, p. 22) and "eBuy" (July 10, p. 18) failed to mention that GCN developed, administered, and hosted the online survey on newspaper Web sites. E&P regrets the omission.

OBITUARIES

Melvin Beiser, 68, retired executive and former managing editor for Reuters North America, died July 14. Beiser began his career with Reuters in 1963. Initially based in London, Beiser later served as a financial correspondent in Geneva and Brussels, Belgium. He was appointed deputy news editor of the Washington bureau in 1967 and returned to London in 1969 to become chief news editor of economic services. Beiser was promoted to editor of Reuters European Services and, in 1975, named managing editor of New York-based Reuters North America. After leaving Reuters in 1977, Beiser helped develop the Nexis research service while working for Mead Data Central.

Monte Edgar Brown, 84, chairman and former publisher of the Seattle Daily Journal of Commerce, died of cancer July 14. Brown served as a major in the U.S. Marine Corps during World War II, and afterwards returned to Seattle to help run the Daily Journal, published at the time by his father, Monte F. Brown. The younger Brown became sole publisher in 1964 after the death of his brother, Leslie. The Daily Journal is now in its fourth generation of family ownership, run by Monte E. Brown's nephew, Denis Brown, and his great-nephew, Phil Brown.

Florence Hartman, 90, longtime secretary to editors at the Chicago Daily News, died July 10. Hartman began her career at the Second City daily in 1928 at the age of 18. Hartman served as a secretary to various department editors, eventually serving as the secretary for then-managing editor Everett Norlander. Hartman retired in 1975 (only three years prior to the paper's own retirement) after 47 years with the Daily News.

Reginald E. Kavanaugh, 72, longtime court reporter, died July 31 of a pulmonary embolism. Kavanaugh spent 43 years as a reporter for The Home News, now in East Brunswick, N.J. After returning from U.S. Army service in World War II, Kavanaugh attended Rutgers University, and began working on what was then The Daily Home News. Kavanaugh spent 35 years of his reporting career covering the Middlesex County Courthouse. He won a National Headliner award in 1965 for a series of articles on drug abuse among young people. He retired in 1993.

Raymond C. Kennedy, 70, former publisher, died July 29. In 1952, after returning from military service, Kennedy became publisher of the Hudson, N.Y., Register-Star, which his family owned and operated. Kennedy purchased the Chatham Courier, a nearby weekly, in 1968, and became chairman. Kennedy remained publisher of the Register-Star until 1985, when he sold the paper to the Park Newspaper Group. Kennedy served separate one-year terms in 1973 and 1985 as president of the New York Associated Dailies, and became in 1969 the youngest president of the New York State Publishers Association.

Jim Kyle, 72, a columnist for The Baytown (Texas) Sun, died July 31 of cancer. Kyle, an award-winning journalist whose career in newspapers spanned more than a half-century, wrote a humorous column that began in the Sun in 1966. His last column was published July 11. He previously worked at newspapers in Odessa and Wichita Falls, Texas, as well as Indianapolis. Kyle, who covered Pope John Paul II's visit to Texas, also covered the Indianapolis 500 for 38 consecutive years. A collection of his columns were compiled in a book, "Awhile With Kyle."

Robert L. Shepherd, 75, retired editor, died July 14 of congestive heart failure. Shepherd began at the City News Bureau, a Chicago wire service, and joined the Chicago Tribune in 1953, where he was later associate book editor. In 1969, Shepherd moved to Long Island in New York to join Newsday as a makeup page editor. Shepherd remained at the daily until his retirement in 1992.

Kenneth J. Stack, 59, a copy editor at The Hartford (Conn.) Courant for 20 years, died Aug. 2 of cancer. Stack began working at the Courant in 1977. Stack was responsible for editing stories, assigning space in the newspaper, and writing headlines. Stack had previously worked at newspapers in Massachusetts, Pennsylvania, and Connecticut. Stack is survived by his wife Kathleen Heasly Stack and children Gregory, Martha, and Megan. Megan Stack is a newswoman in the Dallas bureau of The Associated Press.

Family that stays together

For almost a century, the Paxton family business was just a one-newspaper operation, The Paducah (Ky.) Sun, a regional paper serving western Kentucky and southern Illinois.

That changed in 1989, when the family dipped its toe into the acquisition waters and started what would be a steady stream of deal-making. Today, Paducah Newspapers Inc., since renamed Paxton Media Group, owns 26 dailies in the South and Midwest with a total circulation of 260,000 — and it definitely aspires to more.

Owen Van Essen, whose firm, Santa Fe, N.M.-based newspaper brokerage Dirks, Van Essen & Associates, has sold Paxton several papers, says Paxton is quickly and quietly making a name for itself.

"Anybody who actively follows the mergers and acquisitions of newspaper companies will know of Paxton," Van Essen says. "Ten years ago, that might not have been true. I think they're very well-respected out there."

The Paxton father-and-sons expansion team still centers around 66-year-old Fred Paxton, third-generation steward of this privately held company.

What stirred the Paxtons' business from a one-horse operation into one with a corral full of publications?

Jim Paxton, editor of the Sun and Fred's oldest son, says questions about the future of a local uranium-enrichment plant back in the late '80s, the bedrock of Paducah's economy, prompted him and his father to start talking about diversifying their assets. "We thought it made a lot more sense to have a number of papers in a number of states," he says.

Fred Paxton had another motive. The patriarch wanted to bring his kids, who were chasing success in other fields, back to the family business that his grandfather, W.F. Paxton, founded 103 years ago.

"It was my hope that at least one of my children was going to come back to run the company, and, one by one, the three boys came back," Paxton says. "With the growth we've having, it looks like there's room for all three of them." A fourth child, Nancy, lives in California.

In an economy that favors consolidation and where family-run businesses rarely make it past the second generation, the Paxton group is bucking the trend.

Starting small, the Paxtons bought The Paragould Daily Press, a family-owned, 6,000-daily-circulation paper in northeastern Arkansas, in 1989. Over the next eight years, Paxton concentrated on the South, using bank financing to collect a dozen more rural and suburban dailies. In 1998, the company branched out to the Midwest with the purchase of Nixon Newspapers' nine dailies, seven of which are in Indiana.

The company has ballooned from 200 employees and less than $10 million in annual revenues a decade ago to 1,800 people and annual revenues of more than $100 million today. Its dailies range in size from the Iroquois County's Times-Republic, circulation 2,900, in Watseka, Ill., to The Paducah Sun, circulation 29,500. The group also owns 21 weeklies and NBC affiliate WPSD-TV in Paducah, the nation's 76th biggest TV market.

Like its bigger counterparts, such as Thomson Newspapers, Ralph Martin's Community Newspaper Holdings Inc. and William Dean Singleton's MediaNews Group, Paxton Media Group has found efficiencies in clustering, or buying newspapers in proximity to each other. Its papers use identical software and accounting methods, and Paxton has group publishers in states where the company has a number of papers.

But, otherwise, the Paxtons preach local autonomy. Bill Horner III, publisher at The Sanford (N.C.) Herald, which Paxton bought in 1998, says his new owner is a budget-driven company that demanded more accountability than the Herald's staff was used to, and, thus, a lot of turnover followed the sale. But, he says, there's no question that good newspapering is Paxton Rule No. 1. "They want the local publisher to call the shots," Horner says.

As the new kids on the block, the Paxtons' anonymity proved difficult, and they sometimes left the table empty-handed. Fred Paxton recalls the bidding war for five of the New York Times Co.'s castoffs in 1995.

"We had an awfully hard time getting their attention and getting them to take us seriously," Fred Paxton says. His second son, David, chief financial officer and a former investment banker whose credentials and connections would help grease future deals, nudged the sellers about his bid. Paxton prevailed in the third round of bidding. "In the early days, [sellers] weren't convinced that we knew what we were doing," Fred Paxton says.

That started to change in the mid-1990s, Jim Paxton recalls, when Paxton made some bigger acquisitions. "Suddenly, when people saw us doing the deals, and which banks were behind us, they realized we were for real. Things started to snowball."

In later years, sellers would come to Paxton, drawn by their reputation for integrity and dedication to newspapering.

In 1998, when Bill Horner III's family decided to sell The Sanford Herald after nearly 70 years of ownership, they wrote down the names of several potential bidders. The Horners then ripped up the list and went directly to the Paxtons.

"We didn't go to anybody else," says Bill Horner III, who was promoted to publisher from general manager following the sale. "We wanted a partner with a lot of resources, expertise, [and] who also recognized we've been in the community a lot of years.

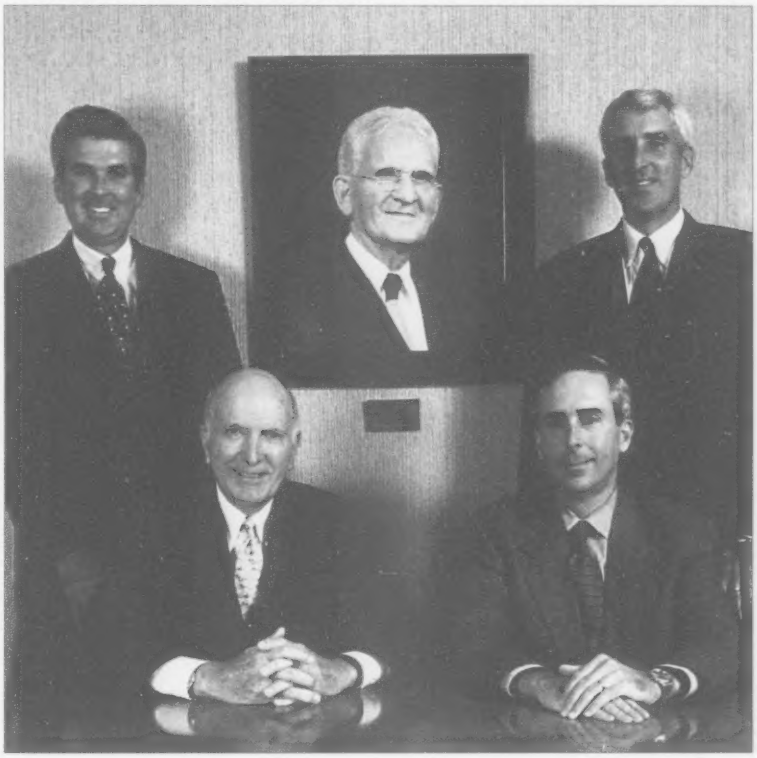
"You meet Fred Paxton, David Paxton, these guys are just wonderful people. What you see is what you get. No pretensions, no games. There's a lot of passion about newspapers. You want to be around people like that."

Paxton's family tradition and reputation for local autonomy also attracted the DePrez family, which was looking to sell The Shelbyville (Ind.) News, a 10,500-circulation daily that had been in the family for three generations. The Paxtons reached an agreement to buy the paper earlier this month, despite not being the highest bidder. "We thought they met our criteria, which was commitment to their employees and to the community," News publisher John DePrez Jr. says.

That reputation has its roots in Paducah, where Paxton Media Group is a benefactor and the Paxtons sit on various boards promoting such causes as business development, education, and the performing arts. In a spirit typical of small-town America, Fred Paxton says he feels an obligation to the community, whose health is crucial to the health of his flagship newspaper.

"This is a relatively small town, and we want it to be as good as it can be," says Paxton, who also enjoys golf, tennis, and church, and has become a World War II buff of late. "If the ones who can do it don't do it, who will?"

Fred Paxton says he considers the company's growth his greatest feat. But he's not looking backwards. Last month, in a nod to the explosive growth of the past decade, he announced a restructuring in the executive ranks that will ease the way for his successor. Among other changes, he turned over the title of president to David, the chief financial officer. The changes will take effect at the next annual meeting in May 2000.



Seth Dixon

Industry observers expect the Paxton Media Group to keep growing. The group, led by David, is on the prowl for more acquisitions. So far this year, Paxton bought the Terry family's half of the 30,000-circulation High Point (N.C.) Enterprise, half-owned by the Rawley family. The company is set to close The Shelbyville News deal Aug. 12, and expects to do more deals before the year is out.

"We're very high on the newspaper business," Jim Paxton says. "Right now, the feeling is that TV is very pricey, and all statistics we see indicate that TV has the rockier future."

So, if a paper in the South or Midwest in the 20,000- to 40,000-circulation range becomes available, expect

Paxton to come knocking.

"Local news," says Jay Frizzo, vice president of the Paxton newspapers, "is still very important, and you're not going to get it anywhere else."

MY THREE SONS

Jim Paxton appeared to be headed for a journalism career, working first as a summer intern at his family's newspaper, The Paducah (Ky.) Sun, then as a reporter at the now-defunct Nashville (Tenn.) Banner and the Lexington (Ky.) Herald-Leader after college.

But the law tugged at him. He enrolled at the University of Kentucky College of Law, then went to work at a firm in his hometown of Paducah in western Kentucky.

It was 1985, and Jim was at a good firm, doing what he loved, and doing well. Then, tragedy struck the family. His cousin, Jack, the well-respected editor of the Sun, was killed when the stunt plane he was piloting crashed.

For the first time in 85 years, the Sun faced being without a Paxton family member for an editor. The family thought of Jim: He had newspaper experience. They asked whether he would consider coming back to run the paper.

Jim walked away from the law and accepted the job. That was 13 years ago, and he is still at it.

"Walking away was very hard," admits Jim, now 44. "I thought, 'Everything I have is because of my family, including my law degree, and now they're asking me to help them.' I felt that obligation."

His dedication to family is typical of the Paxton clan, a close-knit Roman Catholic family headed by patriarch Fred Paxton. It's what has kept the small, privately held Paxton Media Group in the family for four generations, while most family businesses don't survive the third.

After Jim came back, his younger brothers, David and Richard, followed. And so Fred Paxton's sons have come full circle, returning to the family business where, as boys, they worked summers, stuffing inserts into newspapers and cleaning ink off the presses.

It's an outcome that Fred Paxton, the grandson of the company founder, wanted dearly. But not enough to turn over the reins to his children outright. Leave home, develop a talent, he told them, and — if you're good enough — you can work for me. His goal was twofold: to avoid the appearance of nepotism while cultivating expertise that would benefit the company, which has grown from one daily newspaper to 26 in the past 10 years. "In the end, it is a business," he says firmly.

Fred Paxton's advice to his children didn't go unheeded.

Richard Paxton, the youngest son, attended his father's alma mater, the University of Notre Dame, then the Graduate School of Business at Stanford University. In 1990, he was working in corporate real-estate development at LaSalle Partners in Chicago when a retirement left open the controller position at Paducah's WPSD-TV, the station that the company started in the 1950s.

He took the job and left Chicago. Four years later, his father turned over the station presidency to him. "It was a way for me to learn the TV side of the business," he says.

Some 800 miles away in New York, David Paxton, armed with degrees from Harvard and Stanford's business school, was living life in the fast lane as an investment banker on Wall Street.

Back in Kentucky, the family was starting to expand the company. They asked David, whose background in real estate and in mergers and acquisitions fit perfectly, to come back and help make acquisitions. In 1991, he left a 13-year investment banking career to become Paxton's chief financial officer.

"I was attracted by the opportunity to be an owner, not just an adviser," he explains.

If not for his cousin's death, Jim Paxton might still be practicing law today. But his two brothers wanted someday to return to the family business and raise their families in the small town where they grew up.

"It was something I thought would eventually happen," says Richard, 36, father of four. "Having grown up in the business, it was sort of a long-term goal."

For David, now 42, it was a good time to be working on Wall Street.

But it wasn't the life he wanted for his wife and five kids.

"We had both grown up in Paducah, and thought it was a nice place to raise kids," he says. "We'd been back home 48 hours and realized it would be a great fit."

Jim has found his niche in newspapering. He converted the Sun to morning delivery, added color, and oversaw the introduction of pagination and a redesign. He's also managed to keep a toe in the water of his legal practice, handling some of Paxton's corporate law matters and occasionally fighting First Amendment battles, his two areas of specialty.

The family remains tight, bound by a sense of obligation to the company, whose annual meetings are essentially family reunions, and to each other.

"The key to our success is, he made sure the jobs we have are not our birthright," Richard says of his father. "He encouraged us to get out on our own and take responsibility for ourselves.

"Dad feels a strong loyalty to the shareholders. He would never put any of us in a position where it wasn't a good fit."

Fred Paxton also is quick to share praise with his nonfamily managers. "Our company is successful, and it's strong because of a number of really talented newspaper people that are not family members," he says.

Can any family be that perfect? "It is not trouble-free," David says. "You do have occasional conflicts. Sometimes it can be a little more tense when one of us thinks they're right, and the father and brother disagrees.

"But, in truth, you have far fewer [disagreements]," he says. "We tend to think more alike, than we do differently."

Little by little, Fred Paxton has relegated some of his responsibilities to his sons, and has given gifts of stock to his children and grandchildren over the years to reduce their inheritance tax liability, the bane of many family-owned businesses. He plans to sell some of his stock to reduce the tax burden, noting that the Paxton Media Group is better off than other family-owned businesses that have no family members to buy the stock.

No fan of the estate tax, Paxton says it should be eliminated because it discourages local family ownership. "The death taxes are such that families are almost forced to sell the paper," he says. It's not just companies like his that pay the price, but communities, too, he argues. "The family's going to have stronger ties to the community than anybody else does," he says. "A locally owned group tends to be more generous than the others."

Who from the upcoming generation will run the company is another concern. Right now, hopes are pinned on David's 17-year-old son, who works after school at the company's flagship Web site at http://www.sunsix.com. But there won't be any free rides — the Paxtons have made sure of that.

"I think he does have an interest, but I told him the same thing my dad told me," David says. "We have a stated corporate policy — we want our kids to work somewhere else first."

DIGITAL HOW-TO

Pigeonholing hate groups with the Net

Southern Poverty Law Center provides a searchable Web database of racist groups for tracking purposes

by Charles Bowen

In our lifetime, hate groups have become a new kind of news. From drive-by shootings in Chicago to Ku Klux Klan crosses in Cincinnati to the all-out hell of the schoolhouse massacre in Littleton, Colo., haters have forced their way onto the journalist's agenda.

It is a sad commentary that the outrages have become so common that we need a database to keep tabs on who's hating whom. Nonetheless, the experience of the past half dozen years has taught us:

- Hate groups that burst onto the national scene after acts of terrorism often have names we wouldn't have recognized a day earlier.
- Further research usually shows such organizations actually have been growing for years and sometimes even have affiliates in our own readership areas, groups we knew nothing about beforehand.
- The Internet is frequently an integral part of the hate group, which uses the Web to spread its word and to recruit members nationally, even internationally.

Fortunately for us, the Net also is our best resource for tracking these shadowy organizations. For nearly 30 years, Morris Dees and his Southern Poverty Law Center (SPLC) have kept tabs on hate groups. In the early 1980s, the center's Klanwatch newsletter was established in response to a resurgence in Klan activity. Today, Dees and his associates track the activities of more than 400 racist and neo-Nazi groups. After uncovering links between white supremacist groups and elements of the emerging anti-government "Patriot" movement in 1994, the center established the Militia Task Force and now monitors more than 500 militias and related groups.

The results of the SPLC's research, including the material in both of these projects, now are searchable on the center's Web site. It is a database of value to any journalist researching a local organization or working on sidebars to breaking stories of urban terrorism elsewhere. To search for specific groups, start by visiting the site at http://www.splcenter.org and clicking on the "Intelligence Project" link on the introductory page.

On the subsequent page, click on the "List of Hate Groups" (or the "List of Patriot Groups") link for an overview of organizations, along with a map pinpointing them across the country. The "Hate Groups" search facility provides data-entry boxes enabling you to search by state or by type of group (Ku Klux Klan, neo-Nazi, skinhead, black separatist, Christian Identity, or others). The "Patriot Groups" search facility provides for searching by state only.

You also can search the site for background material, including articles from Intelligence Report, the center's quarterly magazine that offers analysis of political extremism and hate crimes. To do that, click on the "Search" icon at the top of the introductory screen. The resulting screen provides a site map, hyperlinking to all current material. Also on the screen is a data-entry field for keyword searching, enabling you to search by topics or locations (abortion clinics, New York, etc.) or by names of people, books, etc. (Eric Robert Rudolph, Turner Diaries).

A "Legal Action" link on the site's introductory page lets you tap into the center's clip files from around the country. A subsequent page offers links to "Courtroom Victories," "Recent Actions," "Anti-Hate Litigation," and "Landmark Cases." Each link leads to a collection of full-text news stories and releases on related subjects.

Other considerations for using the SPLC site in your reporting and editing:

1 For more background on the center itself, click on the introductory screen's link called "Law Center Information." Sections on the resulting page offer a detailed history of the Montgomery, Ala., center, biographical information on the founders and leaders, and information on its assorted projects, including the Civil Rights Memorial, which celebrates the memory of 40 people who died in that struggle.

2 The site also has a section on its Teaching Tolerance program, a national education project to help teachers in the classroom. Links from here connect with the center's Teaching Tolerance magazine, classroom resources and activities, recommended reading, and related material.

3 Use the "What's New" link at the top of the introductory screen or on the bottom of subsequent pages to see the center's latest reports.

Judge says no to Web site press credentials

A sports fan with his own Web site has failed to gain access to cover sporting events at the University of Colorado at Boulder. On July 22, U.S. District Judge John L. Kane Jr. tossed out a lawsuit filed by Theodore Smith, a Denver attorney and avid Colorado Buffalo fan who sought access to events. Smith's sports site is called netbuffs.com.

Smith sued the university and David Plati, its athletic department's spokesman, in February after being denied access to events. The judge said that while the First Amendment lets Smith write or say whatever he wants, it does not require that the university or its employees provide him with any special treatment. "The First Amendment does not ensure … everyone, even the press, access to special information or treatment," reads part of the judge's ruling.

Ford Motor cuts back on its newspaper buys

Shifting gears, auto giant plans more spending on local promotions and the Internet

by Joe Nicholson

Some of the Ford Motor Co.'s advertising cash is being shifted from print to local promotions, such as music and sports events, and the Internet.

The shifts were made "because we are aware there are more options than ever to reach customers," says Carolyn Brown, a Ford spokeswoman. "As the marketplace changes, we need to change the way in which we interact with our customers and potential customers."

This change in strategy comes only a few weeks after the General Motors Corp. reshuffled its media mix to put more money into newspapers, according to a report in the Detroit-based Automotive News.

Ford won't say how much money is being shifted because of the same competitive reasons that lead the company to keep secret its media budget size or mix. Competitive Media Reporting calculates that Ford's advertising spending last year was $943 million.

The bottom line is that auto makers are experimenting with ad budgets to see how they can get the best bang for their buck, according to Edward Lapham, executive editor of Automotive News.

"This isn't the end of the world for newspapers. Ford is pulling some money out of newspapers, but GM is putting money back in. It's ebb and flow," says Lapham.

Ford still buys advertising in newspapers, says Brown, who adds, "Just a few months ago, we ran a campaign in The Wall Street Journal welcoming Volvo to the Ford Motor Co. when we acquired Volvo."

Newspaper ad directors and rep firms need to make convincing pitches to attract advertising, says Brown, who adds Ford is assessing the effectiveness of its advertising in new and traditional media.

"We are interested in any [advertising] opportunities that make sense. As market conditions change, our buy situation could change as well," says Brown.

The decision to advertise in The Wall Street Journal involved a potential benefit for Ford that went beyond selling cars. "The people who read The Wall Street Journal are financial analysts, and they have a lot to say about how our stock is rated," Brown observes.

Ford's agency of record is J. Walter Thompson; Ford corporate advertising is handled by Ogilvy & Mather; and its Lincoln Mercury division uses Young & Rubicam. The company's media buying is handled in-house by its central media unit at corporate headquarters in Dearborn, Mich.

A newspaper ad director must develop increasingly sophisticated strategies because of increased competition from new media, says Lapham.

"He can't be an order taker," says Lapham. "He will be able to increase his [ad sales] in some cases if he is clever — if he is able to see a way to [help] the auto maker in question meet his marketing goals."

A key objective of auto makers is to hold onto current customers because developing new customers is more expensive, says Lapham. That is why auto makers have been experimenting with Web ads and different types of promotions.

"If their customers are on the Internet, they want to be on the Internet. If their customers are at the rodeo, they want to be at the rodeo," says Lapham. "They want to do things with their customers — to participate with them and be a part of their lifestyle."

In another development, movie-goers should brace themselves for an onslaught of GM cars racing at them in Warner Bros. movies. GM has agreed on a long-term marketing partnership valued at more than $200 million with Warner Bros., according to Advertising Age. The deal gives GM first refusal on all Warner Bros. auto marketing opportunities tied to its music, TV shows, consumer products, Web sites, and movies.

Top auto makers in ad spending last year

1.	General Motors	$ 1.9 billion
2.	DaimlerChrysler	$ 1.4 billion
3.	Ford	$943 million
4.	Toyota	$647 million
5.	Nissan	$461 million

How-to book for selling online ads

The Newspaper Association of America (NAA) is selling a new book entitled "How to Sell Online Advertising." Priced at $39.95 for NAA members and $79.95 for nonmembers, it can be ordered by calling (800) 651-4622.

The 59-page primer offers tips on hiring online sales reps, beginning with a suggestion that you "steal them from other sites." But it cautions, "While raiding other sites can guarantee some level of online experience, it also means offering higher comp packages."

Competition for online sales reps has forced employers to abandon compensation based on straight commission, the books says. It says surveys found "a typical starting place would be base plus a commission of 10% to 15% on all new media revenue."

The book also suggests hiring experienced Web media buyers and planners and teaching them sales skills. One firm that failed to train buyers-turned-sales reps, found they fell far short of their quotas, and soon discovered the new "reps were only making five sales calls a week when they should have been making two or three times that many."

Online sales reps should recognize that "most companies, like people, are reluctant to try something new," says the book. When a sales rep is trusted, it reports that customers' first buy of an online ad is often made on "faith alone."

Tired of the Same-Old, Same-Old?

So are we.

Do too many industry conferences look like a "Who's Who" of the speaking circuit? That's what we think.

But ya gotta admit: Some of those "regulars" are real gems. They're the best in the business. And what makes them so good is that they do get around, they listen. They observe. They take action.

And then there's that fresh, raw and undiscovered talent.

The Editor & Publisher Online Classifieds Industry Symposium, September 12 -14, Austin, TX has a line up of speakers that pairs up some of the industry's most seasoned people and papers, with some of the freshest faces and places.

From Amidon to Zollman, and the Austin American-Statesman to www.recycler.com. We promise a program and panel that will leave you with strategies for making breakthroughs in ongoing online issues. Our speakers will be doing more than just looking at and hand wringing over issues that keep getting more complicated, more challenging, more exciting. They'll show you how to take action. Just like they have done. Just like you should now.

E-mail takes big byte out of day for syndicated creators

Cartoonists and columnists like reader messages, but replies eat up lots of time

by David Astor

E-mail is quick. Replying to lots of it isn't.

Cartoonists and columnists welcome the feedback e-mail offers and the reader loyalty built by answering messages. But the process is time-consuming.

Scott Adams, who placed his e-mail address in "Dilbert" in 1993, now spends at least two hours a day handling an average of 300 e-mails a day.

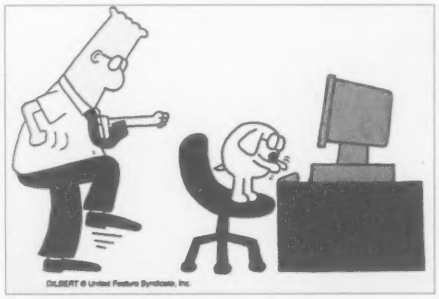
"I read them all and answer the ones only I can answer," says the United Media cartoonist, adding that he has help responding to more standard messages.

Bunny Hoest has received over 2,000 messages — about 20 times the number of postal letters — since putting an e-mail address in "The Lockhorns" last year.

"I spend at least a full day a week working on the e-mail," says the King Features Syndicate creator. "It's an enormous extra load, but very rewarding."

Hoest says she answers all this mail, with help from tech-savvy cartoonist Adrian Sinnott, during time she used to spend on now-defunct comics such as "Agatha Crumm" and "What a Guy."

Syndicated features such as "Dilbert" (over 1,900 papers) and "The Lockhorns" (500 papers) reach millions of readers who might send e-mails. But even local creators have their hands full.



Lots of e-mail can cause creators to dance with joy — and feel dog-tired.

Roberta de Boer, a thrice-weekly columnist for The Blade of Toledo, Ohio, says she devotes the equivalent of a full day a week answering e-mail.

"When I first started using e-mail, I thought it would decrease my workload, but it hasn't," de Boer says, noting that she gets five to 25 e-mails a column while the volume of postal mail (about 10 a week) and phone calls has remained steady.

"Vagabond" columnist Doug Lansky of Tribune Media Services (TMS) also gets a varied amount of e-mail — 10 to 75 a week — depending on the piece. "I received the most after a column I wrote about the complexity of using various third-world toilets. Everyone had a personal misadventure with a foreign toilet that they wanted to share," says Lansky, reached via e-mail in Sweden.

E-mailers also ask for travel information. "And many want to know when I'm retiring so they can have my job!" says Lansky, 29.

Scripps Howard News Service and United editorial cartoonist Henry Payne also gets more e-mail about some things than others. He reports receiving a "flood"

Where it's @: Many features feature e-mail

How many cartoonists and columnists publish an e-mail address with their features? Here are some numbers:

United Media says most of its 36 comics have e-mail addresses, though some drop it some days for space reasons. Three of United's 13 editorial cartoons run e-mail addresses regularly, as do over 75% of its 80 or so columns.

Tribune Media Services says an e-mail address appears in about a third of its 27 comics, three of its 12 editorial cartoons, half of its Op-Ed columns, and most other features, including business columns and puzzles.

The Washington Post Writers Group reports that all five of its comic creators publish their e-mail addresses or will soon do so. No WPWG editorial cartoons have them, but three of 19 columns do.

The Los Angeles Times Syndicate (LATS) says one of its 11 comics, three of its six editorial cartoons, and 13 of its nearly 50 columns include e-mail addresses.

At the New York Times Syndicate (NYTS) and New York Times News Service (NYTNS), about half the columns have e-mail addresses.

Columnists who publish their e-mail addresses are in categories such as Op-Ed (Arianna Huffington-LATS), lifestyle (Martha Stewart-NYTS) personal finance (Kathy Kristof-LATS), advice (Joy Browne-NYTS), careers (Joyce Lain Kennedy-LATS), travel (Adele Malott-NYTS), TV (Marvin Kitman-LATS), humor (David Grimes-NYTNS), real estate (Edith Lank-LATS), and books (Michael Skube-NYTNS).

Creators Syndicate says very few of its features run e-mail addresses. But, as with several other syndicates, a number of these features contain Web addresses that visitors can use to send e-mail. For instance, The Washington Post's daily lineup of 43 comics includes nine with e-mail addresses and 34 without. But 19 of the 34 have either syndicate or cartoonist Web addresses. — David Astor of messages praising a cartoon he did on John F. Kennedy Jr. Payne also gets requests for originals, queries from potential client papers, and messages from aspiring cartoonists seeking critiques.

Payne says he started printing his e-mail address over five years ago because, as someone not on a specific paper, he didn't have enough contact with readers.

"I love the feedback from readers, and I'm really conscientious about responding," says The Blade's de Boer, noting that she sends brief replies to nasty e-mails and longer ones to more thoughtful messages.

But de Boer, who gets some column ideas from e-mail, avoids very long replies because "I already said it in my column" and because of time constraints. "This isn't the Algonquin Round Table," she jokes. "I've got work to do!"

And while de Boer answers e-mails as quickly she can, that doesn't satisfy everyone. "Some people are indignant if I don't write back in 10 minutes," she says.

"Herb & Jamaal" cartoonist Steve Bentley says most e-mailers compliment his TMS comic, but he's also had some negative experiences. One e-mailer harassed him so much he had to put a block on the person's name. "Occasionally, you get people who take fandom to the next level," Bentley says drily.

Adams has some e-mail reservations, too. "The way humans are built, you can get 200 compliments in a row, but the one who says, 'You lost it, you ought to retire,' is the one you remember," he says, adding that he gets more requests, such as to donate original comics for charitable purposes, than he can possibly comply with.

But, overall, Adams is glad he publishes his e-mail address. "You get lots of [comic idea] fodder. People will say, 'My boss is doing this.' And people will give you unfiltered feedback you can't get in any other way," he says.

Feedback is almost immediate, adds Bentley. In comparison, postal letters can take several weeks to migrate from newspaper to syndicate to creator.

"It's wonderful to get a spontaneous response to a cartoon," says Hoest, who does "The Lockhorns" with artist John Reiner. And Hoest, like other creators, has an ongoing dialog with some e-mailers.

Some newspapers pull e-mail addresses from syndicated features. Lansky estimates that only 30% of his three dozen clients run his e-mail address regularly, while Payne says a couple of his 100 clients feel an e-mail address makes cartoons look cluttered. And some editors eager to know what readers are thinking would rather see e-mail messages go to the paper than to syndicated creators. But there are other editors happy to let creators deal with messages.

For creators who don't print an e-mail address, lack of time to answer lots of messages is a big reason. "Columnists with 200, 300, or 400 newspapers are reluctant because the volume of e-mails ... is close to overwhelming," says Washington Post Writers Group editorial director/general manager Alan Shearer.

"I pretty much work seven days a week on my strip," adds "Mutts" creator Patrick McDonnell of King, while noting that "I don't totally exclude" running an e-mail address in the future.

WPWG names comics editor

The Washington Post Writers Group has promoted Suzanne Whelton, a 13-year WPWG veteran, from operations manager to the new position of comics editor.

Karen Greene, who joined WPWG in 1996, moves from production administrator to operations manager.

Both promotions are effective Aug. 30.

Slams his way into syndication

"The Slammer," a column that takes a lighthearted look at pro wrestling, is being offered by United Feature Syndicate.

The weekly column, which has run in the New York Daily News since 1989, is written by a man who wears a hockey mask to keep his identity a secret.

'Go!' traveling to newspapers

A weekly "Feature Front" with a travel theme is being offered by the Scripps Howard News Service. The paginated "Go!" includes stories, tips, and color art.

It's the news service's seventh "Feature Front." Others are titled "Home & Garden," "Health & Fitness," "Food," "Autos," "Money," and "Technology."

United sought the 'Spotlight'

"Spotlight," which offers six color photos of celebrities a week, is being distributed by United Feature Syndicate.

United has added an occasional "Spotlight Interview" (with photo) to the service, which was formerly distributed by Universal Press Syndicate.

Many "Spotlight" photos are from the SAGA Agency, owned by former New York Times Syndication Sales Corp. president Sam Summerlin.

Column houses real estate info

Tribune Media Services is syndicating "Real Estate Matters" by Ilyce Glink, a TV correspondent, radio talk-show host, Quicken.com contributing editor, and author of four books.

The column's clients include the Chicago Tribune, the Los Angeles Times, and The Sacramento (Calif.) Bee.

Geac moves Cybergraphic to Tampa

by Jim Rosenberg

Geac Computer Corp., Markham, Ontario, has begun integrating Cybergraphic Systems Ltd. As reported here from Nexpo, Geac bought the Melbourne, Australia, newspaper systems developer in June for approximately $10.6 million.

Calling the deal "a very good example of our acquisition strategy," Geac CEO Douglas Bergeron said Cybergraphic "adds significant market share to an existing vertical market," as well as distribution and sales opportunities.

Supplier of newspaper editorial, classified advertising, and page-layout software through offices in Australia, Asia, Europe, and North America, privately held Cybergraphic says its revenues grew more than 20% annually for the past three fiscal years. Customers include major newspaper groups in Australia, the United States, and Canada.

With more than 200 installations in 40 countries, Geac is a publicly traded $550-million business that supplies industry-specific software to 10 vertical markets (e.g., banks, manufacturers, hotels) and cross-industry financial, human-resources, and materials-management applications. (The company will grow substantially with its pending $137.9-million acquisition of London-based JBA Holdings, a $335-million, mid-market, enterprise resource planning software supplier.)

Geac offers publishing business systems strength in North America and business connections to the rest of the world. Cybergraphic has well-received publishing production systems and a strong presence in the Asia-Pacific market, where Geac has no publishing customers. So, in markets and products, says former Cybergraphic managing director Bernard Grinberg, "the overlap is quite small, and the synergy is huge." Citing "complementary technologies and areas of expertise," he says the combined organizations can provide a complete ad system without duplicating production interfaces, rating, and account-management.

In 1995, H&R Block sold its well-known Collier-Jackson (CJ) unit to Geac. The Tampa, Fla.-based newspaper circulation, ad-management, billing, and marketing software supplier is now Geac's Publishing Systems division. Grinberg heads marketing of the division's new production systems (mainly his old firm's products, although Cybergraphic licensed others, including Software Construction Co. archiving and workflow).

"It's new for me," says Grinberg. "I have not had a boss for a while." Geac, he adds, will preserve the Cybergraphic product name and revive its CJ brand.

Calling the purchase of Cybergraphic "a significant step toward our goal of offering end-to-end solutions," Grinberg's boss, Publishing Systems' president Warren Fletcher says he's had, "as a strategic objective for over two years, the expansion of Geac … as a sole-source supplier." Given "the appropriate opportunity," he prefers buying to building.

Bernard Grinberg

As for Geac's newer, NT-based VisionShift systems, "I think we can place, over time … CJ product in Australasian and Asian markets," Grinberg says. That client-server suite now features a graphical Web-enabled circulation product and an advertising product with a new rating engine and productivity features. (On July 30, Geac bought Matrix Publishing Systems, maker of circulation-distribution systems that Cybergraphic has distributed overseas; see http://www.mediainfo.com/ephome/news/newshtm/stories/080599n1.htm.)

A few of the small staff at Cybergraphic's offices in Burlington, Mass., were laid off, and the operation is consolidating with Geac Publishing Systems in Tampa.

Grinberg, who finally relocated from Australia to Massachusetts after periodically visiting to run Cybergraphic's U.S. operations, is moving to Tampa. Cybergraphic's Melbourne-based chief scientist (and one of its handful of former owners), Brian Abbott, also is staying on. "He's the last person we'd like to see leave," says Fletcher.

Arguing that it's difficult for overseas suppliers to take root in the United States on their own, Fletcher says Geac can give Cybergraphic a boost in North America by "leveraging our position" here, which includes lending Geac's service and support reputation.

To grow, Cybergraphic must stretch beyond its home turf, where installations represent 80% of Australia and New Zealand newspapers. "It's a small market," says Grinberg.

Similarly, Bob Howarth, editorial technology manager at News Ltd.'s Queensland Newspapers in Brisbane (which recently upgraded to NT-based CyberNews and CyberPage), observes that the supplier "just about exhausted the potential," in its home market. That realization may account for his comment that the "sale wasn't a big surprise here." Howarth says Cybergraphic did not notify users until after they already had learned of the sale over the Internet.

(Users met Cybergraphic/Geac executives Aug. 3 in Christchurch, New Zealand, at the Pantech trade show where the company showed the latest features of its Genera system, including Internet ad-booking.)

Grinberg concedes that it's been "difficult to get acceptance here," though in recent years his company sold systems to Knight Ridder, South-am-Hollinger, and other North American groups' papers.

Fletcher approached Grinberg (whom he first met in 1985 while on CJ business in Australia) about buying Cybergraphic. "Originally, I wasn't selling" says Grinberg, noting that Cybergraphic was, after all, "a profitable company." But other shareholders were ready to accept a "nice gain" on their investment.

Anticipating "a long haul" to establish itself in North America, Cybergraphic worried that in the course of its three-year plan it would lose sales to newer vendors in the market, such as CCI and Unisys, says Grinberg.

While most U.S. customers and prospects he's talked to like Cybergraphic products, says Fletcher, service has been the issue. "We will legitimize them as a North American company," he says. Howarth reports that his U.S. counterparts told him "they liked Cyber's products but were reluctant to deal with a company based on the other side of the world" — even as some seem happy to deal with European vendors.

On a practical level, both companies' new product lines are NT-based systems, and having the same operating system and SQL databases is a great boon to systems integration, according to Fletcher.

At Nexpo, Cybergraphic joined the few others already working with Adobe Systems to incorporate the forthcoming InDesign software in publishing systems. According to Cybergraphic product development vice president Lee Silverman, InDesign will be integrated with editorial products for other than high-end customers in North America.

Besides probably working with Geac on sales and marketing, says Grinberg, "we'll be doing some joint development" — even though Abbott will remain in Australia, which Grinberg calls a good research-and-development environment owing to its skilled work force and government incentives.

EXECUTIVE EDITOR

Our vice-president and executive editor is retiring at year end and we are looking for someone to take us to the new millennium.

We're looking for a strong innovative leader with proven news management skills to help our 300 newsroom professionals continue to build The Indianapolis Star into one of America's great newspapers.

We want to improve and deepen our content to make it more vibrant and relevant to readers thus growing circulation. We want to strategically target content improvements to fast-growing suburban areas. We want to expand our newsroom involvement in Starnews.com and broaden our news gathering partnership with a local television station. And we want to be nimble enough and focused enough to exploit niche publication opportunities presented us by the marketplace.

Most of all, we want our newsroom to be an inclusive environment that attracts and develops the best journalists in the business; a place of high expectation and great reward.

We're looking for someone with broad news experience and interests. We need a proven leader with demonstrated success in building a strong newsroom organization, and experience in successfully working across departmental lines for the customers' benefit.

The ideal candidate will have spent several years as a reporter or copy editor, section editor and senior managing editor. He or She will possess a passion for good journalism and hard work that is infectious and visionary.

The Indianapolis Star and The Indianapolis News have a combined daily circulation of 278,000 and Sunday circulation of 380,000.

We can offer a very attractive compensation and benefits package, an opportunity to live in a thriving Midwest city with big city attractions and a high quality of life, and an association with a parent company, Central Newspapers, Inc., which is decentralized, innovative and financially strong.

This is the perfect opportunity for a person with a year of daily reporting under their belt to hone their skills in a fun mountain town. It also is a perfect opportunity for a seasoned journalist who wants to get out of mainstream newspapers and be allowed some freedom.

We are looking for someone who can dig up news on a daily basis and has a strong hard news sense that can find stories outside of government meetings. Topics in this high-profile town include the ski industry, big business, consumer news and secret dealings within the government.

If you want to be part of a news team that works under the motto: "If you don't want it printed, don't let it happen," the Aspen Daily News is for you.

Applicants with one year reporting experience is preferred. Send résumés to Carolyn Sackariason, 517 East Hopkins Avenue, Aspen, CO 81611 or call (970) 925-2220 ext 218.

THE DAILY NEWS LEADER in Staunton, VA, is looking for someone to reshape and update its editorial page with clear writing, solid editing and the ability to break the traditional mold. Our opinion page already is one of our strengths. Now we want to move the page up a notch. Should be thoughtful, exact and prolific, able to craft clear thoughts into words; works into pages. We are an 18,000 seven-day Gannett newspaper in the beautiful Shenandoah Valley. Résumé, clips to David Fritz, ME, P.O. Box 59, Staunton, VA 24402. Questions: editor@cfw.com We value diversity.

THE NEWS & OBSERVER, A McClatchy newspaper (circulation 159,000 daily, 207,000 Sunday) based in Raleigh-Durham-Chapel Hill, North Carolina, has two openings on its business desk for experienced journalists who want to join a growing staff in the dynamic Research Triangle.

TECHNOLOGY REPORTER

This reporter is part of a three-person team that covers the companies and the culture of one of the nation's fastest-growing high-tech regions. Research Triangle Park, with more than 100 companies and research institutions, is at the heart of software, networking and e-commerce companies. IBM, SAS, Cisco, Nortel, Lucent and Red Hat are just some of the global leaders that make covering business in this area challenging and exciting. We are looking for an individual who has a proven record of being able to break news and demonstrated writing ability. A fascination and familiarity with technology is essential.

COMMERCIAL REAL ESTATE REPORTER

This reporter covers one of the hottest commercial real estate markets in the country. Our changing economy and lifestyles are fundamentally altering the way offices, apartments and shopping districts are being shaped and marketed. This beat goes beyond the deals to chronicle how these economic and demographic trends are being reflected in the urban landscape. Commercial real estate is an excellent opportunity for a metro reporter with experience covering growth and development to gain a business journalist's understanding of markets and companies.

Successful candidates will have daily deadline experience. Business journalism experience preferred but not required. Please send cover letter, résumé, three references and work samples to:

EDITORIAL

THE GAINESVILLE SUN, a 60,000 circulation NYT regional daily, seeks ultra-ambitious reporters to cover night cops, education and general assignment news. Requirements: CAR skills, a flair for features and two years experience. Send résumé, references and clips to Matt Reed, metro editor, The Gainesville Sun, P.O. Box 147147, Gainesville, FL 32614-7147.

THE HICKORY DAILY RECORD, a Media General-owned 20,000 circulation daily in North Carolina, seeks résumés for sports and news reporters and news copy editor. Send to Tom Clark, P.O. Box 968, Hickory, NC 28603-0968.

THE VICTORIA ADVOCATE, a 40,000 daily on the Texas Gulf Coast, has a new managing editor who is looking for two talented newspaper journalists to fill critical leadership roles in the newsroom.

ASSISTANT MANAGING EDITOR/
METRO EDITOR

The successful applicant will be an experienced daily content editor who is able to generate compelling story ideas, provide leadership to reporters with varying skills and experience levels, and massage copy so that it holds the reader to the last sentence while remaining accurate and balanced, all while meeting strict deadlines. This person must also be able to direct blanket coverage of breaking news, bringing together all newsroom departments to cover events in a 12-county area. We want a great writer and editor with solid news judgment and coaching skills. The AME will report to the managing editor and generally will work Monday through Friday 9-6.

CHIEF OF THE COPY DESKS

The successful applicant will be an experienced daily copy and layout editor who can oversee presentation and production of all pages. This person will, with the assistance of the news, sports and lifestyle editors, ensure that all of our headlines are crisp and compelling, that all of our pages are attractive but reader-friendly, that all mistakes in local and wire copy are ferreted out, and that all deadlines are met. We want someone with solid word skills, creative presentation ideas, extensive QuarkXPress pagination experience and the ability to lead a diverse group of copy editors, paginators and section editors to the next level. The chief of the copy desks will report to the managing editor and generally will work Tuesday through Saturday 2-11.

Good salary and benefits packages. Applications will be accepted through August 13. Send résumé, work samples, salary history and at least three professional references to Scot Walker at The Victoria Advocate, P.O. Box 1518, Victoria, TX 77902, or E-mail SWalker@vicad.com No calls. Superior applicants will be contacted to schedule interviews and tests.

EDITORIAL

THE VICTORIA ADVOCATE, a 40,000-circulation daily on the Texas Gulf Coast, is accepting résumés from both experienced and entry-level copy editors. The Advocate is a thriving, family-owned regional paper that prides itself on local news, and our newsroom leaders are dedicated to maintaining an atmosphere for learning and professional growth. Our news copy editors do it all: page design, headline writing, wire handling, pagination and editing of copy. Our ideal candidates have experience in all these areas; they can write crisp, clear, concise and compelling headlines; they have an ear for the language; and they know how to use QuarkXPress. But we're willing to train recent college graduates who demonstrate outstanding aptitude. Send your résumé to Julius Ermis, news editor, The Victoria Advocate, P.O. Box 1518, Victoria, TX 77902; E-mail jermis@vicad.com or fax to (512) 574-1220. To learn a little about our paper and our community visit our Web site at:

Raising the U.S. batting average

Clinton's suggestion of a political box score may not be a bad idea, to separate the Hall of Fame policy-makers from the minor leaguers

During a recent White House press conference, President Clinton suggested that the news media should use a regular feature of the sports page to help judge his legacy.

"I think that there will be a box score," he said, "and there will be that one negative, and then there will be the hundreds and hundreds of times when the record will show that I did not abuse my authority as president."

While some might quibble with the president's math, the box score concept would actually be a helpful journalistic tool, particularly in covering the nation's most intrinsic and enduring problems.

Why not combine the statistical rigor of the sports page with the journalistic standards and scope of the news pages?

Box scores are not completely unfamiliar to the news pages. Back in the mid-1990s, when readers had to do without Major League Baseball statistics because of its labor-management dispute, many papers picked up the slack by printing "Contract With America" scorecards on their news pages.

Coincidentally, the baseball dispute was settled just as the first 100 days of the relevant congressional session ended, so most papers totaled up the "Contract's" final results and returned box scores to the sports section.

Yet, as everyone — even we sports fans — knows, regardless of how many "Contract" items actually passed, their ultimate success could not have been measured by the 100th day, let alone the 1000th. The ultimate results of any legislative change can take years to emerge.

With no independent method to appraise success or failure, how can the electorate accurately judge if progress is being made? One way would be for the press to establish itself as the official scorer. Box score coverage would chart the successes and failures of policy initiatives — whether it be congressional legislation, state and local programs, or smaller private projects — aimed at solving the nation's most intractable problems.

Through charts and solid in-depth reporting, news organizations could closely monitor the short- and long-term effectiveness of different policy alternatives and determine where else these solutions are applicable. Once, space constraints would have made this approach impractical. However, if the Internet has provided anything, it's space.

The mainstream press does a superb job of finding and assembling information; it is less successful in keeping its ongoing attention — and, in turn, the public's — focused on society's most complex problems, such as education, drugs, and the underclass.

Yes, special features often highlight extraordinary programs making a difference. Newsweek devoted almost an entire issue to "What Works." The Washington Post Magazine has introduced a periodic feature by the same name. ABC's "World News Tonight" dubbed its "model" segment, "Solutions."

Yet rarely is there follow-up. Three years later, are the patients at the "model" drug rehabilitation program still clean? Has the program continued its same level of service? And if it does work, why isn't it being copied? Periodically, there will be an anniversary special report, but that's the exception. These problems aren't going to be solved overnight, so the reporting must reflect it.

Welfare reform, No. 3 in the "Contract" batting order, lends itself perfectly to this. With experiments going on nationwide, the results will be hotly contested. Clearly, there is a need to determine what works and what does not.

One hopeful model may be Newsweek's periodic "Commitment Watch," created to monitor corporate volunteer pledges after the Summit on America's Future. Why not apply that same approach — matching proposals to results — to issue-oriented coverage?

There may be concern that scoreboard coverage could bring even more of a racehorse mentality to the reporting of public policy. But it should not be an either/or proposition. Why not combine the statistical rigor of the sports page with the journalistic standards and scope of the news pages?

I am not suggesting that news organizations turn over control of their papers and newscasts to their graphics departments but just complement in-depth reporting with clear, easy-to-read box scores. It is coverage that is well-suited to news reporting in an era of expanding media and devolving government.

The continuing trend towards federalism ensures that there will be an increasing number of local initiatives on issues such as education and welfare reform. The results will be hotly contested, and the press is in a perfect position to keep score. The Internet provides a perfect outlet since it allows ongoing coverage without the limitations of a 30-minute radio or TV show or a daily newspaper.

The president's scoring of his legacy, like his scoring of his golf game, may be questionable. But the need for the press to keep track of the efforts to solve society's problems is not. Borrowing box scores from the sports page would help.

Solomon, a New York-based journalist, is a former cable TV executive and congressional aide.

What is inept about explaining Beijing's actions toward Taiwan by saying, "Beijing considers Taiwan a renegade province"?

It perpetuates a historical fallacy that hinders understanding of a complex current issue instead of clearly and accurately reporting the facts behind today's news:

- Fact: The Republic of China was founded in 1912 after the collapse of the Ch'ing dynasty, which ceded Taiwan to Japan in 1895. Japan then surrendered Taiwan to the ROC in 1945.
- Fact: The ROC government has exercised sole jurisdiction over Taiwan since 1945. Four years later, it lost control of the mainland, and the People's Republic of China was proclaimed.
- Fact: The ROC government relocated to the remaining territory under its jurisdiction—the Taiwan Area in 1949. Beijing has threatened to take Taiwan by force but has never succeeded.

So who should be calling whom the "renegade"? The authorities in Beijing—not Taipei—divided China in 1949, and nothing has changed since.

Uncritically quoting the use of an incongruous label such as "renegade province" to describe Taiwan glosses over failure to articulate the crucial complexities of the issue.

Clarify the story by saying, "Beijing wants to bring Taiwan under its rule." It is clear, succinct and accurate. Isn't that the essence of balanced and objective coverage?

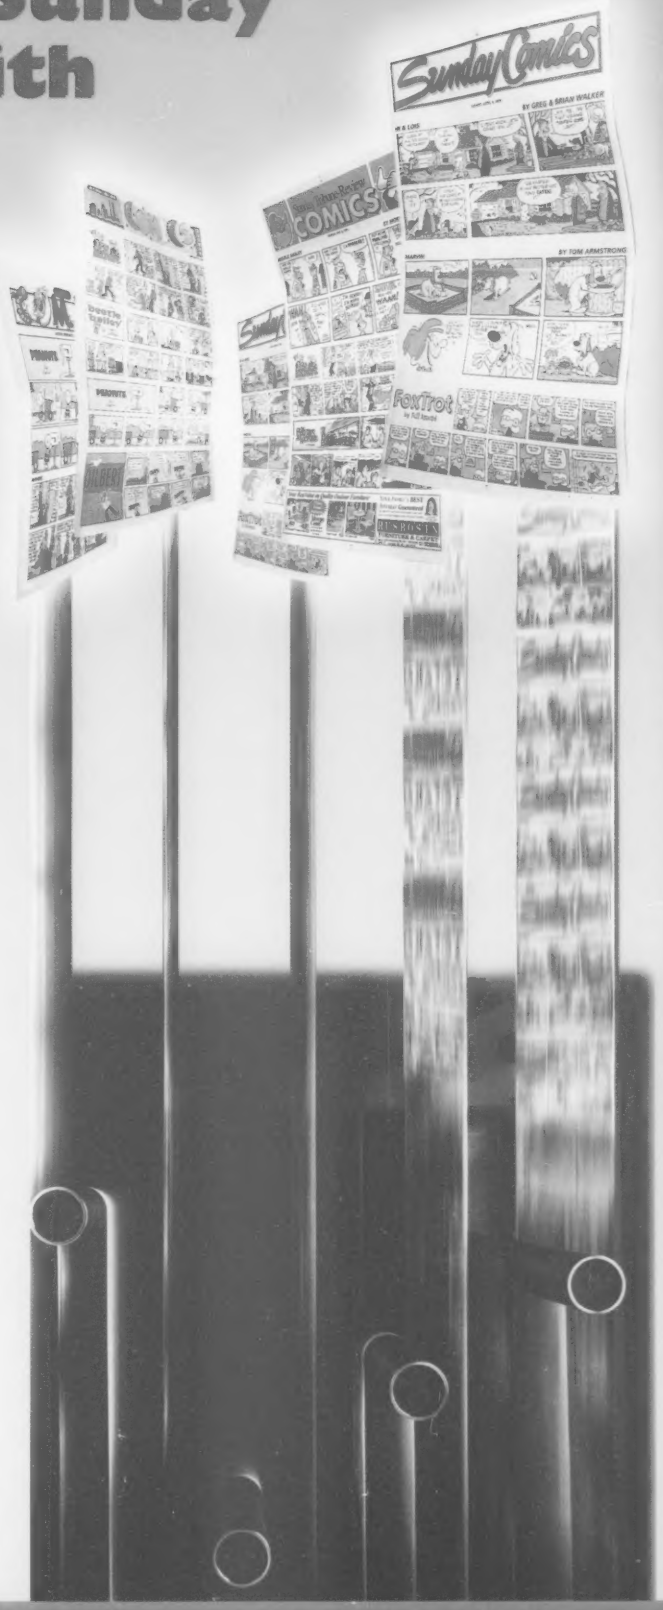
COLOR COMICS Sections!



King Features prints Sunday comics sections for more than 150 newspapers. At affordable prices!

In large markets with customized sections, King provides on-site support to help generate sales of Spadeas, gatefolds and other press-fed inserts — so comics can pay their way, or better.

For smaller newspapers, King helps contain costs with a selection of top-flight generic sections and choice of formats, and absolutely the finest comic printing quality.

Find out how King Features can help you attract readers and advertisers. Call Jack Walsh, Director of Publishing Sales, today at 212-455-4201. Or e-mail: jwalsh@hearst.com

We'll do the writing, you sell the ads.

Enhance your automotive, classified and display sections with articles from the Automotive News Syndicate

Automotive News is the authoritative weekly newspaper that's a must read for America's automotive executives and dealers. Put that power to work in your newspaper with any of four ready-edited automotive packages from the Automotive News Syndicate.

THE AUTOMOTIVE REPORT
More than a dozen articles every week from all areas of the business: the cars and trucks as well as manufacturing, retail, technology, and finance. The real stories on what's happening behind the scenes in the industry. Includes the latest news from the recognized leader in automotive industry reporting, Automotive News; in-depth new car reviews from Auto Week; and news on automotive advertising and marketing from Automotive Marketer.

DRIVE TIME
A weekly package of briefs about cars and how they're designed, built and sold. Simple, timely, interesting, and fun!

AUTOMOTIVE NEWS* NEW CAR & TRUCK INTRO PACKAGE
At the start of each exciting model year: a look at all new models from the major manufacturers. Enough useful information and pictures to fill an annual new models special section. Available in early October.

WHEELS 101
A weekly Q&A on the basics of buying, leasing, and maintaining new and used cars, SUVs and light trucks.

Custom packages are also available from most other Crain Communications publications. For a complete listing go to www.crain.com

The Case for Excellence

The Millennium Edition Catalog from The New York Times Syndicate.

Our case for high-quality, reader-pleasing material presents editorial content from more than 70 sources as well as The New York Times.

For the first time, features are arranged by subject category into mini-catalogs to help you quickly find the right item for a page or section.

In Lifestyle, you'll see new columns by Dr. Joy Browne and by Martha Stewart (on weddings). In News/Commentary/Perspective, a new column by novelist Salman Rushdie. In Entertainment, a new regular feature by Kenny Rogers on American music.

Making editors' lives easier in the new Millennium is a key goal of The New York Times Syndicate.

Dr. Joy Browne

Kenny Rogers

Salman Rushdie

Martha Stewart

We can even help you cover the Millennium: We offer six special sections from The New York Times Magazine's commemorative issues.

Since the next Millennium may be as much about the Web as about print, you'll be happy to learn that many of our columns, features and packages are also available for on-line use.

FREE OFFER — Return the postage-paid reply card above and we'll rush the six-part Millennium Edition catalog to you — plus the world's first e-mail address book!

(IT WILL, HOWEVER, BE SYNDICATED.)

There's a new revolution on the Web. And it's coming to over 75,000 sites near you.

Introducing iSyndicate, the world's first marketplace for syndicated Web content. Our premise is simple: we've created a virtual one-stop-shop for the greatest selection of syndicated content anywhere: articles, photos, audio, video, from over 400 leading content providers and growing. Packaged and delivered direct to your Web site, continually and automatically. 24 hours a day, 7 days a week.

For Web sites large and small, it means more traffic and the power to grow from stopover status to Web destination. For content providers, it means increased revenue and a rare brand building opportunity. Pretty revolutionary stuff.

Stop by www.isyndicate.com to see our content marketplace in action or e-mail sales@isyndicate.com

Sorry, no couch potatoes allowed.

We're known by the company we keep

Universal Press Syndicate

an Andrews McMeel Universal company

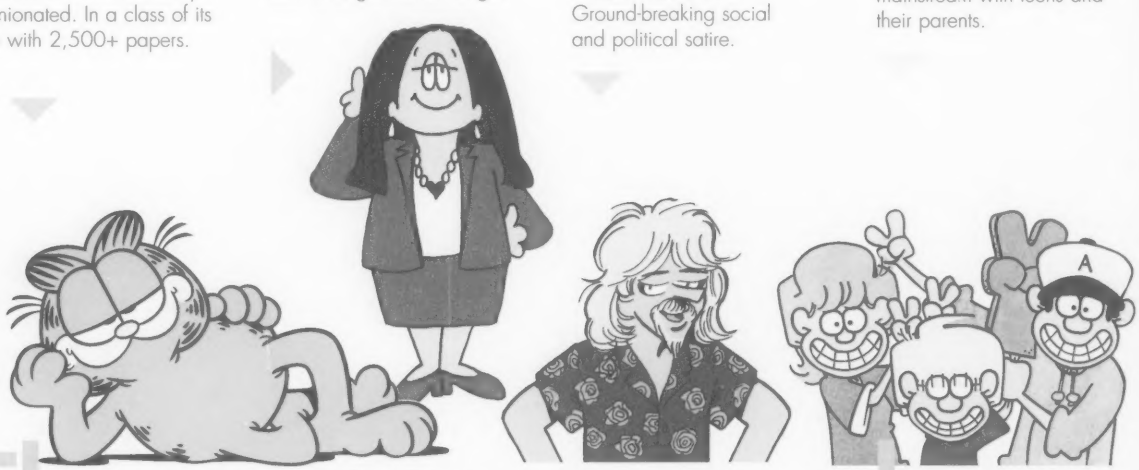
We pride ourselves on the company of creative talent who call Universal Press Syndicate their home. And we're proud of our record for selecting that talent. Only 11 comics introduced since 1970 have surpassed 1,000 newspaper clients. Universal Press Syndicate happily acknowledges an association with more than half of those comics.

Garfield
Jim Davis
A cat for all seasons. Sassy. Opinionated. In a class of its own with 2,500+ papers.

Cathy
Cathy Guisewite
Icon of single-woman angst.

Doonesbury
Garry Trudeau
Pulitzer Prize-winner. Ground-breaking social and political satire.

FoxTrot
Bill Amend
First comic in three years to break industry's 1,000-client mark in 1998. In the mainstream with teens and their parents.



The company we keep

Close to Home
John McPherson
Weird-looking characters with even weirder takes on life. So funny you'll forget your own weirdness.

Crankshaft
Tom Batiuk and Chuck Ayers
Irascible Crankshaft is a working man's hero. Sympathetic to issues of the aging, Crankshaft is the real McCoy.

In the Bleachers
Steve Moore
Sports humor with an attitude.

Ziggy
Tom Wilson
Lovable, optimistic everyman Ziggy makes wishing on a star seem somehow OK.

comics

Adam@Home
Brian Bassett
Welcome to the new way to office. Work-at-home dad deals with humanity while chasing down overnight delivery trucks and the perfect latte.

Bizarro
Dan Piraro
Humor and writing so strong, they could grow legs and walk.

Tank McNamara
Jeff Millar and Bill Hinds
Topical, biting, funny commentary and spoofs from America's best-loved sports announcer.

The Boondocks
Aaron McGruder
If you haven't heard about "The Boondocks," you will. This strip about kids of color growing up in predominantly white suburbia launched with a record-breaking number of newspapers and national media attention. It's hip-hop, and it's now.

Heart of the City
Mark Tatulli
Heart is a savvy little city girl from South Philadelphia who sometimes drives her single, working mom to just shy of the breaking point. Mrs. Angelini, the nanny, creates a warm ethnic charm. Beautiful art and solid writing are credited to professional artist Mark Tatulli.

Crabby Road
John Wagner
There's no mystery why flippant and saucy senior Maxine is the most popular character in the Shoebox Greetings line.

Stone Soup
Jan Eliot
A household composed of several generations of women, with just the right interaction of male characters, is funny, touching and in tune with the times.

Real Life Adventures
Lance Aldrich and Gary Wise
It's about stomach noises in business meetings, bugs in your porch light and trying to extract a single hanger from a closet.

Overboard
Chip Dunham
Modern-day pirates spend more time being pilloried than pillaging.

The Simpsons
Matt Groening
America's most-loved dysfunctional family is coming to newspapers weekly in color. But hurry, limited engagement.

Universal Press Syndicate's comics can be found at www.uexpress.com and are available for online use. See samples at www.uclick.com.

From advice to movie reviews to kids' stuff, Universal Press Syndicate offers quality news, opinions and entertainment features.

Dear Abby
Abigail Van Buren
Wisdom for all ages from the most widely read syndicated columnist in the world.

The Motley Fool and Motley Fool University
They inform, amuse and help readers make money.

The Mini Page
Betty Debnam
For 30 years, The Mini Page has been making learning fun for millions of children.

The features that inform

You Can With Beakman and Jax
Jok Church
Great illustrations and creatively written science feature for kids.

Roger Ebert
Movie reviews, interviews, Q&A and weekly home video alert from a Pulitzer Prize-winner.

Chuck Shepherd's NEWS of the WEIRD

News of the Weird
Chuck Shepherd
Proving forever that truth is stranger than fiction.

Minneapolis firefighter Gerald Brown, 55, who was fired in 1995 for abuse of sick leave but who won a grievance hearing and was reinstated with 18 months' back pay, was scheduled to return to work on June 2. He called in sick.

David S. Broder

Donna Britt With her hip, personable style and traditional values, Britt connects with readers on many levels. Her compelling insights on family, culture, race and spirituality add fresh life to any newspaper. Once a week.

David Broder Broder dissects the political world better than anyone. His acumen, accuracy and passionate belief in democracy have made him the nation's most respected reporter. Pulitzer winner. Twice weekly.

Richard Cohen A left-leaning writer brimming with strong ideas, Cohen uses his sharp wit and intellect to examine political and social issues from the perspective of an average citizen. Twice weekly.

E.J. Dionne An accomplished reporter and leading thinker in the modern progressive movement, Dionne evaluates political philosophies and public sentiment with an engaging tone of civility. Twice weekly.

Richard Estrada One of the nation's foremost immigration experts. Estrada also explores other political and social issues of American life. Associate editor of the editorial page of The Dallas Morning News. Once a week.

Ellen Goodman A remarkable writer with a keen sense of what's important in our public and private lives. Goodman's incisive reasoning, along with her humor and humanity, resonate with readers everywhere. Associate editor of The Boston Globe. Pulitzer winner. Twice weekly.

Jim Hoagland A two-time Pulitzer winner – for foreign reporting and commentary. Hoagland's savvy grasp of global politics and economics tunes readers in to the reality of our times. Masterful at analyzing world leaders and the changes they bring. Twice weekly.

Michael Kelly Never a slave to conventional thinking, Kelly uses his rapier-like wit to skewer political wrongdoers. A gifted stylist who leans conservative but finds offenses throughout the political spectrum. Editor of National Journal. Once a week.

Charles Krauthammer A self-professed "man without a party." Krauthammer's columns on society and government affairs demonstrate a clarity that often eludes U.S. and world leaders. Pulitzer winner. Once a week.

COMMENTARY

E. J. Dionne George F. Will William Raspberry Robert J. Samuelson Neal Peirce

Geneva Overholser Former editor of The Des Moines Register and ombudsman of The Washington Post, Overholser knows what readers are concerned about. She informs and surprises on a wide range of issues. Twice weekly.

Neal Peirce An expert on innovative politics at the local level, Peirce pinpoints the successes and failures of cities and regions adapting to a global economy. Reports trends months ahead of the national media. Once a week.

William Raspberry In his quest to unravel tough issues, Raspberry delves into the facts and moves readers toward solutions. One of the nation's foremost commentators on race, education, crime, and justice. Pulitzer winner. Twice weekly.

Robert J. Samuelson In addition to world-renowned economics reporting, Samuelson offers common-sense solutions to political and social problems, and an occasional iconoclastic look at everyday life. Once a week.

George F. Will The pre-eminent conservative thinker today. A writer of great precision and style, Will enthralls his readers with his broad range of topics and ability to challenge and surprise them. Pulitzer winner. Twice weekly.

Geneva Overholser

EDITORIAL CARTOONISTS

Nick Anderson A youthful presence on the editorial page. Anderson's clean lines and classic style accompany his first-rate, cutting-edge satire. Chief editorial cartoonist of The Louisville Courier-Journal. Four cartoons a week.

Signe Wilkinson An accomplished satirist with a distinctive drawing style, Wilkinson has a flair for finding irony and hypocrisy in all walks of life. Editorial cartoonist of The Philadelphia Daily News. Pulitzer winner. Four cartoons a week.

WRITERS GROUP

The Nation's Housing by Kenneth R. Harney Harney's mix of original reporting, market analysis and tax advice helps readers protect the biggest investment of their lives. With two-thirds of Americans owning homes, no publication should be without Harney's consumer reporting. Once a week.

Jane Bryant Quinn The most widely syndicated personal finance columnist today. Quinn makes even the most arcane subjects easy to understand, showing consumers the road to economic security and how to avoid being foolishly parted from their money along the way. Twice weekly.

The Color of Money by Michelle Singletary An award-winning column that offers common-sense lessons about life and money. Singletary brings to financial sections a whole group of readers who either have never read the business page or once saw it as too intimidating. Once a week.

"12:01"
by Thomas Boldt

12:01 by Thomas Boldt The haunting hour begins at midnight, if the spirits aren't busy playing Nintendo. "12:01" tells the story of Boris, an affable 18th-century ghost haunting his modern-day nieces – the constantly feuding Kendra (a consultant) and Georgia (a TV personality). A truly original strip that draws jokes from both the front page and the history books. Daily and Sunday.

Non Sequitur by Wiley Wiley's goal is simple: "Produce the funniest, best-drawn cartoon possible, regardless of theme, subject matter or setting." The overwhelming response of readers worldwide shows that he succeeds. Four-time winner of the National Cartoonists Society's comic strip and panel division award. Daily, in both strip and panel formats, and Sunday.

Pickles by Brian Crane Earl and Opal Pickles share the delights and dilemmas of their golden years with their strong-willed daughter Sylvia, sweet 5-year-old grandson Nelson, plus a close circle of friends and dear pets. "Pickles," with its gentle, dry humor and genuine characters, tops one comics survey after another. Daily and Sunday.

"Non Sequitur" by Wiley

PC and Pixel by Thach Bui and Geoff Johnson A victim of downsizing, PC Odata plugged in his home computer to start free-lancing, and then the real problems began. Filled with observations on technology, cats (including PC's net-surfing cat, Pixel) and everyday life, "PC and Pixel" finds absurdity in the modern techno-world. Daily and Sunday.

"Pickles" by Brian Crane

That's Life by Mike Twohy A quirky, intelligent and creative comic that offers snapshots of human behavior, whether in the doctor's office, at a family picnic, at work or in the afterlife. Sometimes warped and always entertaining, "That's Life" is a bright new star for the comics page. Daily in panel format and Sunday strip.

"That's Life"
by Mike Twohy

"PC and Pixel" by Thach Bui and Geoff Johnson

FEATURES

Carolyn Hax Tom Shales Jane Horwitz Bill Lombardo and Thach Bui

Cheap Thrills Cuisine by Bill Lombardo and Thach Bui From the kitchen of chef Bill Lombardo and the pen of Thach Bui comes a unique cartoon for the food page. Each strip is a quick and easy recipe, including desserts, entrees, sides and seasonal dishes. In color or black-and-white. Once a week.

"Cheap Thrills Cuisine" by Bill Lombardo and Thach Bui

The Family Filmgoer by Jane Horwitz Written for parents and children, Horwitz's capsule reviews point out what's good, what's appropriate for different age groups and which films families will best enjoy together. Includes "Beyond the Ratings Game," a chart breaking down the ratings of 10 or 12 current releases. Once a week.

Tom Shales Loved by readers, followed anxiously by TV executives. Shales gives credit when due, but he's at his hilarious best when harpooning pompous and puerile programming. Pulitzer winner. Twice weekly, plus specials on major televised events.

Tell Me About It by Carolyn Hax There's a lot of angst out there, and Hax cuts through it all. Answering readers' questions with attitude, she gives the under-30 crowd the advice they need in a voice they understand. Twice weekly, with illustrations by Nick Galifianakis.

Washington Post Book World A team of top-shelf critics turns out up to 20 reviews and features each week, plus behind-the-industry stories and guest essays from authors. Featuring Pulitzer winners Jonathan Yardley and Michael Dirda. Two transmissions a week – the Sunday tab and weekday reviews.

Washington Post Magazine Crossword Puzzle One of the most creative and challenging crosswords available. The Post Magazine puzzle is known for its humor and clever clues, put together by some of the nation's top constructors. Once a week.

Paginated Pages

Scripps Howard News Service offers more than 600 stories each week on everything from gardening to government, sports, news, features, editorials and op-ed, illustrated by color photos and graphics.

Scripps Howard produces stories you can't find anywhere else at an exceptional value. We specialize in enterprise stories that go behind the scenes, provide insight and analysis, look ahead and break news. We've added new beats including religion, education, Latino/minority stories and consumer/family issues.

Special Sections

At no extra cost, subscribers receive these annual packages of stories with art: Brides, Gardens, Home, Summer Vacation, Back to School, Consumer Electronics, Christmas Gifts, Fitness, NASCAR, Baseball, Football, Basketball and the Olympics.

Our stories and photos are produced by a 50-person newsroom in Washington, D.C., and by dozens of contributing newspapers from around the world, including Scripps Howard papers such as the Denver Rocky Mountain News and The Commercial Appeal of Memphis. Partner papers include The Observer and The Guardian of London, the St. Petersburg Times, St. Louis Post-Dispatch, Milwaukee Journal-Sentinel and Pittsburgh Post-Gazette.

Scripps-McClatchy Western Service

We offer a separate and distinct wire targeting the Western United States. The Scripps-McClatchy Western Service includes stories of regional interest from the Sacramento Bee and the best newspapers from Denver to the Pacific.

Paginated Pages

SHNS produces weekly paginated pages on Home & Garden, Health & Fitness, Food, Personal Finance, Personal Technology, Travel and a half-page Auto section.

Contact: Peter Copeland, editor/general manager, at 202-408-2756.

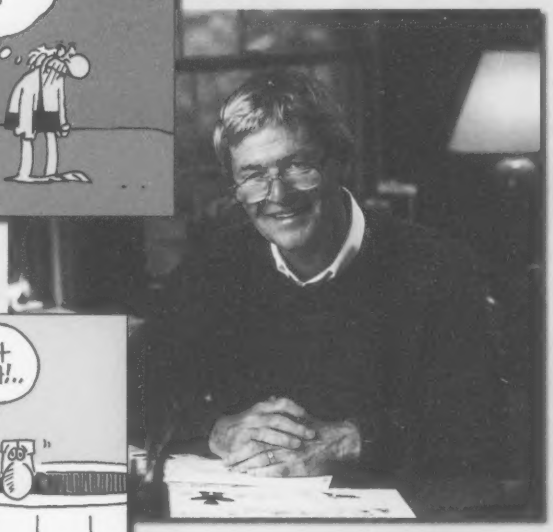
The Wizard of Id A comic strip by Johnny Hart and Brant Parker

Johnny Hart
The creator of B.C. and The Wizard of Id is the most widely syndicated cartoonist in the world.



Tony Kornheiser
The brash, witty style of The Washington Post's Tony Kornheiser enlivens newspaper pages across the country.

Linda Bowles
Linda Bowles tells it like she sees it – to the cheers of conservatives and the jeers of liberals.

Inside Report by Robert D. Novak
Solid reporting and clear-sighted analysis are what make Robert D. Novak of the Chicago Sun-Times essential to every Op-Ed page.

Chip Bok

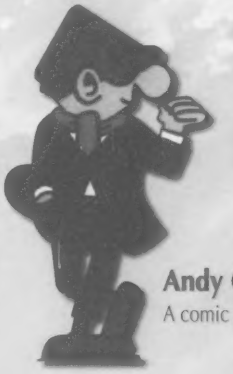
Tony Snow
One of Fox News' brightest stars, Tony Snow tackles Washington and the world with wit and insight.

Momma
A comic strip
by Mell Lazarus

Ann Landers
With 1,200 newspapers, Ann Landers is the most widely syndicated columnist in the world – and loved by her 90 million daily readers.

Miss Peach
A comic strip by Mell Lazarus

Roger Simon
U.S. News and World Report's Roger Simon writes prose that tickles readers with its humor and touches them with its poignancy.



Andy Capp
A comic strip
